The Finance Bill

THE eagerly awaited Finance Bill was published on Tuesday afternoon[1] and proved to be a most formidable document of 226 pages with ninety clauses and nineteen schedules. Happily it was closely followed by two White Papers, one on the new capital gains tax and one on the new corporation tax[2], which seek to explain in ordinary language what the provisions about these two new taxes are intended to achieve.

The principal provisions have already been expounded in the House of Commons at some length and therefore readers of the Bill as published were more concerned with some of the detail which the Government had not so far filled in. And there is indeed a great deal of detail, some of it not very palatable. It was already known that companies would have to account to the Inland Revenue for the tax on dividends and other distributions made after April 5th, 1966. The Bill makes it clear that this extends to capital profits dividends. Moreover there will be no question of retaining the tax for months; companies will be put on a monthly accounting basis as in the case of deductions of P.A.Y.E. tax. This applies not only to dividends but also to interest and annual payments.

The Bill shows how the Government experts deal with the twin and opposite desires of the CHANCELLOR both to induce companies in general to plough back profits and to force what the Bill calls 'close companies' to distribute their profits. Section 245 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, is to be repealed, along with sections 251 to 257, and also several minor provisions of the existing surtax direction legislation. A definition of 'close company' appears in Schedule 17 and follows to some extent the definition of a company to which section 245 at present applies. However, a company which is controlled by its directors (however numerous) will be a close company. A close company will be expected to distribute 'the required standard', which is defined as the whole of the distributable investment income of the company plus 60 per cent of its estate or trading income. However, if the company has no associated company, then estate or trading income less than £1,500 is to be disregarded, while estate or trading income up to £9,000 is to be regarded as reduced by one-fifth of the amount required to make it up to £9,000. These provisions are reminiscent of the exemption and abatement provisions for profits tax.

The excess of the 'required standard' distribution over the actual distribution is called the 'shortfall' and is subject to assessment to standard rate income tax on the company, except in so far as it is the result of legal restriction on its distributions. In any case the company may appeal against the assessment and seek to satisfy the appeal commissioners that > 'the company could not make distributions up to the required standard without prejudice to the requirements of its business', whereupon the appeal commissioners can direct an appropriate reduction in the shortfall. However, the shortfall is not in any case to be reduced below the amount (if any) by which the distributable investment income exceeds the distributions made, unless the company is a trading company or a member of a trading group. There is provision for set-off where the close company subsequently distributes more than the required standard of a subsequent year.

[2] Taxation of Capital Gains. Cmnd 2645. H.M.S.O. Price 1*s* 9*d*. The Corporation Tax. Cmnd 2646. H.M.S.O. Price 3*s* 6*d*.

These provisions for levying standard rate tax on the close company in respect of the shortfall are contained in clause 72. The next clause provides for apportionment and sub-apportionment of a close company's income for surtax purposes. However, in general, the amount apportioned is not, in the normal case, to exceed the shortfall. It will be observed, therefore, that there are two significant departures from the existing surtax direction provisions. In the first place, a slight under-distribution can no longer attract a direction of the whole of the company's income, but only a proportion of it. In the second place, the onus of proof has been swung over to the taxpayer. If a close company wants to distribute less than, broadly speaking, 60 per cent of its income, it must prove that there are good business reasons for it.

So much for standard rate income tax and surtax in relation to close companies. What of corporation tax? As was expected, in arriving at the close company's total income for corporation tax purposes there are restrictions on the deductions for remuneration of directors other than 'whole-time service directors'. This latter phrase has a definition closely following that in the Profits Tax Acts. The overriding maximum deduction for directors' remuneration is £25,000 per annum, or 15 per cent of the profits, whichever is the less. The 15 per cent limit is not applied where the total remuneration does not exceed £3,500. Moreover, as in the case of profits tax, there is an alternative standard where there are two or more full-time working directors (who are not whole-time service directors). In such a case the 15 per cent is increased – by clause 69 (2) (3). This substitutes an overall limit of £11,000, reduced to £8,500 if for half or more of the accounting period there are less than four such full-time working directors, and to £6,000 if there are less than three. If the highest paid of these directors receives less than £3,500 the amount to be allowed for the others is increased by the difference. These figures relate to an accounting period of one year; they are reduced on a time basis where the accounting period is shorter.

The close company is also the target of other provisions. If it pays consideration to a 'participator' for a restrictive covenant it must also pay standard rate income tax on the consideration. If it lends money to a participator (otherwise than in the course of a business of moneylending) the close company must pay standard rate income tax on the grossed-up amount, with provision for recovery if the participator repays the loan. If any part of the loan is written off or released, the participator must pay surtax. The definition of 'participator' goes far beyond that of a shareholder, and is obviously designed to circumvent the most devious of arrangements whereby an individual seeks to be a member in effect though not in form.

Appeals which were made to the CHANCELLOR to give to small companies exemption and abatement from corporation tax have not been successful. Of course the very small company, if it pays remuneration which reduces its income to nil, will not be called upon to pay corporation tax, but the recipient of the remuneration will be chargeable to income tax and (possibly) surtax in respect of it. For the very small companies, the restrictions on the deductibility of directors' remuneration are unlikely to make much practical difference. On the other hand, the figure of £2,500 per full-time director is very low in these days of high salaries. Certainly it does not approach Government ministerial salaries. Members of Parliament receive £3,250, and they are not regarded as in full-time employment.

Company Distributions

THE Budget and the debate on it have introduced some new thinking on the tax treatment of various kinds of distributions made by companies. It has been said that if companies had preceded the present tax system, instead of following it, the tax system might have been less involved. But, in relation to distributions, company law itself is something of a morass in which one has to tread warily.

It would have been helpful if the reform of company law, for which the Jenkins Committee was set up, could have been completed before the proposed new tax provisions emerged. Instead of this, the Jenkins Report is still apparently pigeonholed in the Board of Trade. Moreover, recommendations in the report itself on this topic are not free from constructive criticism, as is demonstrated by a memorandum submitted last January to the Board of Trade by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, referred to in the Council's recent annual report and which we reproduce elsewhere in this issue.

The Council agrees with the Jenkins Committee that the law with regard to distribution of profits should be clarified, but it points out the need for careful definition. Paragraph 350 (a) (b) and (c) of the Jenkins Report say that a net realized 'capital profit' should be distributable only where the share capital and reserves remaining are fully represented by assets; that an unrealized capital surplus should not be distributable as dividend; and that past revenue losses should be eliminated before subsequent profits are distributable, i.e. the revenue account should be a continuous account.

The Council points out the difficulties of making hard and fast distinctions between capital and revenue, and submits that the profits or surpluses to which (a) and (b) should apply are those which result from the disposal or revaluation of assets of a kind which, in the ordinary course of the business, are not held as current assets. The Council also submits that premiums on issue and discounts on redemption, of loan capital should fall within (a). Further submissions dot the i's and cross the t's of the Jenkins' recommendation.

One of the most intractable and complicated topics on company law is that concerning the payment of dividends ultimately out of profits made by a subsidiary company before it was acquired. Here again, the recommendation of the Jenkins Committee needs considerable expansion and clarification, and the Institute's memorandum deals with both these requirements.

Naturally the memorandum expresses agreement in principle with the general thesis that pre-acquisition profits should not be available for dividend, because in general this would be paying dividends out of capital. However, the ramifications of acquisitions are limitless, and a simple rigid prohibition could well cause hardship. One of the more simple cases is where distributions by the acquired subsidiary exceed the cost of acquiring the shares of that subsidiary. But there are more subtle variations on the theme and these the memorandum sets out with commendable clarity, bearing in mind the inevitable complexity of a subject which is perhaps better expounded by arithmetical examples than by mere words. The solution of the difficulties proposed by the Institute is an extremely ingenious one and we should not be at all surprised if it is officially adopted. It is to be hoped, however, that in that case the Parliamentary draftsmen who are charged with the task of formulating the appropriate provisions are fully instructed as to the problem they are dealing with. Some of the provisions of the Eighth Schedule to the Companies Act, 1948, about the accounts of groups of companies left a good deal to be desired. Perhaps by the time the drafting stage is reached, arithmetical examples will be available for the enlightenment of those who are concerned with the formulation of the new legislation.

The Institute's memorandum also contains other interesting suggestions on matters of company law.

Planning against Misadventure

by JACK SAMMONS, A.A.C.C.A., A.C.W.A.
Manager, Administrative Services, Sterling-Winthrop Group Ltd

THE accountant busily forecasting the future for his company should also consider the types of misadventure which can conceivably overtake the business. In many parts of the world predictions by accountants may be upset by unexpected storms or floods – even earthquakes – and plans for such disasters are considered as part of the security arrangements for the business. Businesses in Britain need plans of action, too, to cater for fires, the risk of unexpected taxes, tariffs, nationalization, loss of key personnel and unfortunate events; not because these things are inevitable but because they are possible.

Recovery after such misadventures can be planned by accountants in advance, so that interruption or cessation of the business as a going concern may be avoided. Insurance cover for fire damage and other losses form the external protection of a business; but the accountant within can also provide against these emergencies by organizing protection of the business, its records, property and employees.

Each accountant will need to assess the plan his business requires to take care of nationalization of an industry, or the imposition of crippling taxes and tariffs which can affect dividend payments or the prices paid for raw materials.

Safeguarding Supplies

Plans against the physical destruction of business premises need formalizing. Many accountants will already have some form of retention system for records, and perhaps an informal arrangement with another company to use their accounting machines in an emergency. These arrangements need inclusion in the overall plan against misfortune, following a survey of the vulnerability of the business. If disaster strikes, time spent in marshalling employees, repairing damage, restoring the business, and resurrecting destroyed records can be minimized if there is a plan of action, and such plans show a forward-looking policy for the business.

Supplying saleable products after disaster presents a great problem, particularly to the company with only one production unit. One way to cover this is, of course, to allow for buffer stocks in outside warehouses; but where this advance measure increases investment in stock beyond acceptable limits, emergency production facilities must be sought from producers of similar products. Other manufacturers in the industry may welcome an opportunity to plan a mutual-aid programme, to be put into operation should disaster overcome one member of the partnership.

Saleable products cannot be made available unless essential raw materials are also forthcoming. Lists of alternative suppliers can be drawn up as part of an emergency production plan, so that if disaster cuts off one source of raw material or power, another is available to take its place.

Legal Aspects

Safeguarding production is one priority, but there are others. Fire, flood, or even warfare would cause disruption to communications, transport, data processing arrangements, and plans for these contingencies need consideration. The Red Cross, local fire officers and industrial civil defence officers are trained to advise on some of these matters; and insurers can make useful suggestions to minimize loss of profits following disaster.

If some unfortunate event leads to destruction of vital or valuable documents, the accountant and secretary will have some difficulty in establishing shareholdings, the legal authority of the company, amounts payable to suppliers and debts owed by customers. Advance planning for this eventuality means storage of records and contracts in other locations, possibly in the form of microfilm. To avoid duplication of current records, the previous months' balances can be stored and destroyed as these are replaced by later records. The accountant's plan can consider financial arrangements in emergency, and where funds are concentrated in one geographic area he may decide on dispersal throughout the country; multi-unit organizations can deposit funds at banks near their locations.

The company's normal safety programme and fire drills form a basis of protection for personnel; to go to the extreme these would need overhaul as a measure of precaution against the possibility of nuclear warfare. (Fall-out shelters and emergency food supplies are taken seriously in the U.S.A. and one large steel firm has gone even further by printing blank pay cheques for their staff, to be cashed only in the event of disaster.)

A plan of succession needs to be worked out and published to cover the loss of key management personnel in a fire, accident or other misadventure. The plan need not be related to actual promotion prospects, but is just one other form of protection and should be based on geographic vulnerability of staff.

If a 'misadventure programme' is to be considered seriously for an organization, it is evident that there must be guidance and direction from the top management. The accountant or some other senior person will need to consider the many aspects of security involved. Time and money spent on framing such programmes must be weighed against the possibility of not being able to continue in business. Insurance policies can cover loss of profits and provide for monetary assistance, but these do not provide full compensation for loss of goodwill, 'know-how' and jobs in the face of misfortune. In America, disaster plans are treated with great respect; they have been developed to include many other aspects of security not covered in this short article. Security arrangements in most United Kingdom companies might not include some of the misadventures taken into consideration there, though presumably British businesses are almost as vulnerable.

Pensions for the Self-employed

CONTRIBUTED

IT has become more or less accepted in a concern of any size or standing that pension arrangements should be made for the staff employed. Depending on the size of the organization, this may be by means of an insured scheme or it may be self-administered. The actual method of providing the benefits is of little concern here, the point being that employees are eligible to join the scheme.

Even in concerns where there are insufficient staff to warrant the setting up of a special scheme, there is no reason why individual pension policies should not be effected by the firm – these really being 'top-hat' policies, although not used in quite the same way as is usual in the case of this type of policy.

The drawback, however, to such types of arrangement is that partners and controlling directors may not participate in any pension scheme designed for the employees of the firm. Fortunately, however, this does not mean that it is impossible for such people to arrange to have a pension, but simply that it will be necessary for them to make their own personal arrangements from their own resources.

Exactly the same position obtains in the case of anybody who is self-employed or who, for that matter, is an employee but who is ineligible to join any group pension scheme. The usual reason for ineligibility is simply that the man's employer is not prepared to make provision for a pension.

So far as individual pensions for the self-employed are concerned, the position is that prior to the Finance Act, 1956, if provision was made for a pension, relief of income tax was not allowed on the premiums. The 1956 Act brought in the fair provision that premiums paid towards special deferred annuities should be free of income tax and surtax. The result has been that for anyone who is a comparatively high surtax payer, this can be a most useful method of making provision for the future from gross income.

Limits to Tax Relief

Attractive as this may appear to be, it should be borne in mind that there are various limits so far as the relief is concerned. For instance, anyone born in 1916 or later is allowed relief on 10 per cent of gross earned income, after the deduction of charges, or £750 (whichever is the lower). In the case of those born in 1914 or 1915, the figures are 11 per cent of income or £825. An additional 1 per cent of income (and total amount of £75) is added for each two years of earlier birth until 1907 (or earlier) is reached. In this case the limit is 15 per cent of net relevant income or £1,125.

Besides the fact that full relief of tax is allowed, another point of particular interest is that there is no fixed annual premium. The premium a person elects to pay may fluctuate according to income and expenses. There is a useful provision that often the premium for such a policy need not be paid until it is known what the upper limit for tax relief will be.

Further flexibility is allowed by the fact that there is no need, when a policy of this type is first effected, for there to be any set date from which the pension becomes payable. The usual stipulation is that provided it will be between the sixtieth and seventieth birthdays of the person concerned, he may choose nearer the time exactly when he wishes it to be paid. Clearly, it will be higher the longer the starting date is deferred. Incidentally, there is nothing to stop anybody from continuing to work while the pension is being paid.

So far as the benefits from this type of deferred annuity are concerned, since tax relief was allowed in full on the contributions, the payments are taxed as earned income and are not divided into capital and interest elements for tax purposes as, for instance, occurs in the case of an immediate annuity.

It should be remembered, however, that such a policy only makes provision for a pension and will be of little use in the event of death before retirement. Depending on the terms of the individual policy, in the event of death the best which can be expected is that the premiums paid to date will be returned with interest added (a fairly low interest rate being used); or the premiums may be returned without added interest. Obviously, the benefits after retirement in the case of this type of policy will be rather better than if there is a condition that, on death before retirement age is reached, interest is added to the premiums.

Although a policy may be offered where there is no return of premium at all in the event of early death, probably it is unwise for most people to take the risk of accepting such a policy despite the fact that, should they survive, the benefits will be rather better than would be obtained from the other methods.

Interest Free of Tax

A point worth bearing in mind in connection with this form of policy is that the income received by the insurance offices from the premiums which they invest is not subject to tax. Clearly this is attractive to an annuitant.

Should such a policy be on a non-profit or a 'with profits' basis? In the case of a non-profit policy, the benefits are known in advance and are guaranteed irrespective of the fluctuating investment fortunes of the insurance company. Nevertheless, it is often considered preferable (especially over a reasonably long term) for a 'with-profits' policy to be effected so that the pension will be increased by bonuses declared from the profits of the insurance company. On the other hand, there are various ways in which special deferred annuities may be effected so that they are directly linked to equities.

There is one scheme which is based on the units of a unit trust. Instead of each single premium earning a cash annuity, the pension payments are expressed as a cash sum equal to the price of a stated number of the units. In the event of death before pension age, the actual cash sums paid as premiums are returned, without interest.

An example of the system is that if a man pays a premium, when exactly 40, which is equivalent in price to one hundred of the units, this will earn him a pension (paid quarterly in advance) at the age of 60 amounting to the equivalent price of 3·05 units. If, a year later, another premium is paid which is equal to one hundred units when it is paid, this would increase the quarterly pension by the equivalent of 2·95 units. From this it can be seen that the benefits are geared solely to the market price of the units. A stipulation so far as this scheme is concerned is that the minimum premium at any one time must be £200.

Special Fund

Another insurance office has a plan whereby similar single premiums are carried to a special fund. Normally this is invested almost entirely in ordinary shares. The benefits are expressed in units and their value fluctuates with the experience of the fund. There is, therefore, no guaranteed benefit. There is not the same restriction concerning minimum premium as in the case of the other scheme and, in the event of death before the annuity starts, the current net value of the units which have been secured by premiums is paid. In this case, also, the whole of the dividend and interest income of the insurance office's fund is exempt from United Kingdom income tax.

The company has sole discretion as to the investment policy, although the general aim is to invest in high-grade Ordinary shares. Besides commission, stamp duty and brokerages, there are certain expenses levied on the fund. For instance, the company retains 4 per cent of the premiums received, 5 per cent of the dividend and interest income, and also 2 per cent of the annuities paid.

Good as this general type of arrangement may be, in view of the fact that tax relief is allowed on the premiums and the dividend and interest income of the insurance companies is not taxed, this form of contract has drawbacks on account of its inflexibility; for, apart from the return of premiums in the event of early death, the policy can be used in no other way. As it cannot be surrendered for cash, it will not be accepted as security for a loan.

Alternative Method

Consideration should therefore be given to an alternative method of providing a pension, although it must be admitted that it, too, has certain drawbacks. Basically, the principle is to effect a normal endowment life assurance policy which will mature when retirement takes place. This is drawback number one, for the maturity date must be determined when the policy is established. And, unlike the deferred annuity, it will be necessary for a level premium to be paid each year. When the policy matures it can be used to purchase an immediate annuity, thus providing a set annual sum for the rest of the person's life.

One of the advantages of this particular method is that during the period while the endowment policy is in force, it acquires a surrender value. Thus, if necessary, it could be surrendered for cash and so can be lodged as security for a loan.

So far as the tax position is concerned, tax relief of two-fifths will be allowed on the premiums paid towards the endowment policy. This compares rather unfavourably with the whole premium in the case of the deferred annuity which has been described. On the other hand, there are tax advantages so far as the annuity is concerned. For if an annuity is purchased at the age of 65, about 65 per cent of each payment made is free of tax altogether. The Inland Revenue lays down that the capital element of such an annuity is £7 0s 11*d* per cent. This amount is looked upon as being repayment of capital and thus is free of all tax. The remaining part of the annuity is considered to be the interest element and it is taxable on the unearned income basis.

Incidentally, although, in general, the practice will be to use the maturing endowment policy to purchase an immediate annuity in the open market, it is quite a good plan, as a safeguard, to have incorporated in the endowment policy an annuity option. It should be appreciated, however, that the yield quoted is likely to be on the low side as the insurance company will not wish to commit itself to a higher rate many years in advance when it cannot know what the market rates of interest will be at the time.

Generally speaking, it can be said that the higher is a person's income from all sources during the years of retirement, the more likely it is that an endowment policy and, later, an annuity, will prove to be of benefit. Here, of course, it should be added that the question arises again as to whether a policy should be on a 'with-profits' basis or not. Basically the same arguments for a 'with-profits' policy hold good and it is the general opinion among those who should know that, over the years, this will provide the best value for money.

Comparison of Costs

How do the two methods compare so far as cost is concerned? As an example, take a man aged 40 who wishes to retire at the age of 65. A level annual premium of £100 per annum gross paid towards a 'with profits' deferred annuity should provide a pension of about £400 per annum (paid monthly in advance and guaranteed for five years). This premium would, of course, be subject to full relief of income tax and surtax.

If the endowment policy and annuity method was adopted by the same man and a level £100 per annum gross was paid towards an endowment policy, only two-fifths tax relief would be allowed on the premiums. The guaranteed sum payable under the policy might well be £2,150. To this would be added the bonuses declared over the years, which might well increase the maturity value to £3,775 or so.

If this sum was used to purchase an annuity, probably about £400 per annum (or rather more) could be obtained. Incidentally, of this, only about £145 would be subject to tax (as unearned income). The remainder would be free of all tax.

Although the outcome may look rather similar, it should be borne in mind that the net premiums are lower if the first method is adopted and the net benefits are higher if the second method is adopted.

Among the variables is the fact that there is no fixed premium under the first method, so that it can be amended each year in the light of circumstances. But unlike the second method, the policy cannot be surrendered or used as security for a loan.

No hard and fast rule can be made as to which method is likely to be best. Only the outline can be given and each individual case must be judged on its own merits and requirements.

Company Law Amendment

Memorandum submitted by the Council to the President of the Board of Trade and reproduced from the Council's annual report for 1964

THE Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales wishes to bring to the attention of the President of the Board of Trade a number of points which it is hoped will be of practical assistance in framing legislation to amend the Companies Act, 1948.

Most of the submissions which follow fall within the broad framework of the recommendations of the Company Law Committee (the Jenkins Committee); but some, notably those relating to share premiums and discounts and the treatment of pre-acquisition reserves, either diverge in some important respects from those recommendations or introduce fresh considerations.

The Council has under consideration some further suggestions in connection with amending legislation and will submit these as soon as possible.

Rights of Personal Representatives

1. Paragraph 31 of the Jenkins Report recommends in effect that the personal representatives of deceased members of a company should be empowered to apply to the Court to order a meeting of the company, where it is impracticable to call a meeting of the company in the normal way, in the same way as members under section 135 of the Companies Act, 1948. This goes part of the way to meeting a difficulty which occurs in the circumstances of private companies (which by definition restrict the right to transfer their shares). On the death of a shareholder there may be a considerable delay in making an acceptable transfer of the shares held by the deceased. Meanwhile the directors, acting in accordance with the provisions of the articles of association, may refuse to register the personal representatives as the holders of the shares with the result that the estate of the deceased (who may have been a controlling shareholder) is prevented from exercising the voting rights which the deceased had by virtue of his shareholding.

Submission

2. The personal representatives of a deceased shareholder of a private company should be entitled to exercise the voting rights attaching to the shares held by the deceased.

Alterations of Objects and Rights of Minorities

3. Section 5 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, provides that where a company has by special resolution altered its objects, the alteration may be cancelled by the Court on application by the holders of not less than 15 per cent in nominal value of the company's issued share capital or any class thereof. In sub-paragraph 54 (d) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that 5 per cent should be substituted for 15 per cent. They explain (in paragraph 49 (ii)) that they have suggested this alteration so that a person with a grievance shall not be prevented from making an application through failure to obtain the fairly large proportion of 15 per cent; on the other hand they had in mind that the proportion required should not be so small as to encourage vexatious applications. To fix the proportion at 5 per cent however seems inconsistent with the recommendation in paragraph 198 (e) of the report (dealing with appeals by dissenting minorities against variations of class rights under section 72 of the Act) that an application to the Court may be made by the holders of 10 per cent instead of 15 per cent of the issued shares of the class concerned.

Submission

4. The minimum proportion of shareholders by whom application may be made to the Court to set aside an alteration of objects or a variation of class rights should be fixed at a consistent figure throughout the Act; 10 per cent of any affected class is thought appropriate.

Directors' Powers to Dispose of Company's Business

5. In paragraph 122 (e) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that the directors of a company should not be able without the specific approval of the company in general meeting to dispose of the whole or substantially the whole of the undertaking or assets of a company. The Council supports the general intention of this recommendation, but suggests that it should be qualified in two respects.

Submissions

6. In order to facilitate intra-group transfers there should be exempted from the provision proposed by the Jenkins Committee sales proposed to be made to a company in the equity of which the transferor company has directly or indirectly at least a 75 per cent interest.

7. Provision should be made to protect shareholders in circumstances in which a holding company may seek to evade new legislation as proposed by the Jenkins Committee by disposing of substantially the whole of the assets of the group through the medium of subsidiaries without obtaining the approval of the shareholders of the parent company.

Disclosure of Directors' Interests and Emoluments

8. The Jenkins Committee recommended in paragraph 99 (e) of their report that section 195 (1) of the Companies Act should be amended to make it clear that directors must disclose interests in securities held jointly or in common with others, or life, reversionary or contingent interests. The scope of this recommendation is drawn very widely and it is possible that a director might prove to have one of the beneficial interests specified without being aware of it. He might, for instance, be wholly unaware that contingent on certain circumstances he would be the beneficiary of a particular estate.

Submission

9. Legislation requiring disclosure of directors' interests in securities of the company or its parent, subsidiary or fellow subsidiary companies should be framed in such a way as to require a director to disclose any interest within seven days of his becoming aware of it.

(This period would be consistent with the recommendation in paragraph 99 (f) of the report that a director should be required to notify the company of any transaction affecting his holdings within seven days of such a transaction coming to his knowledge.)

Disclosure of Transactions in Directors' Holdings

10. Paragraph 99 (f) of the Jenkins Report recommends that directors should be required to notify details of transactions affecting their holdings and includes transactions in which sales are offset by purchases (or vice versa) within a stock exchange accounting period and consequently are not recorded in any formal instrument of transfer.

Submission

11. It should be made clear in any requirements to disclose directors' share dealings that the provisions extend to bargains carried over from one stock exchange account to the next.

Disclosure of Directors' Interests in Contracts

12. In paragraph 99 (l) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that section 199 (1) of the Companies Act, 1948, should be amended to require a director to disclose any material interest, direct or indirect, in any material contract or proposed contract, including any which do not come before the board, to the board of directors at the first meeting of the board at which it is practicable for him to do so.

Submission

13. A director should be required to declare his interest not only in contracts with the company but also in contracts with or relating to any of its subsidiaries whether or not he is a director of them.

Disclosure of Directors' Interests in Contracts for Management and Administration

14. Recommendation 99 (n) of the Jenkins Report relates to the disclosure of certain information in the directors' report and the filing of particulars with the Registrar of Companies in respect of directors' interests in contracts for the management and administration of the whole or any substantial part of any business of the company.

Submission

15. Any provision relating to the disclosure of particulars of directors' interests in contracts for the management and administration of a company should also require information to be disclosed regarding contracts with or relating to the management or administration of subsidiaries of the company.

Share Premiums

16. Subject to what is said in paragraphs 36 to 45 and paragraph 47 below in relation to the treatment of pre-acquisition reserves following an exchange of shares, the Council agrees with the existing statutory provision that share premiums should not constitute profit available for distribution. It also supports the view of the Company Law Committee that the obligation to recognize a share premium should not be confined to transactions in which share capital is issued for a consideration expressed in cash but should apply also to those in which shares are issued for a consideration not so expressed. It recognizes, as did the Company Law Committee, that in these latter transactions the monetary amount which for accounting purposes has to be attributed to the consideration is a matter of opinion, but considers that the test to be applied is whether the amount so attributed is such as enables the accounts to give in terms of money value (as distinct from nominal amount of shares issued) a true and fair view of the transactions.

17. When shares of one company are issued in exchange for those of another, a requirement to recognize as a share premium and credit to the share premium account any excess of the amount attributed to the consideration over the amount credited as paid up on the shares so issued may in the consolidated accounts create, or give rise to an increase in, intangible assets. This will be the sum by which the amount attributed to the consideration for the shares acquired exceeds the amounts at which the underlying net assets are brought into the consolidation. There is however among business men a general and understandable reluctance to increase intangibles, and this reluctance has been an added obstacle to the recognition of share premiums on the acquisition of subsidiaries by means of an exchange of shares. Whether this objection to intangibles is well founded or not the Council considers that its existence must be recognized and that it is expedient to meet it as far as possible. It would be met, at least in part, if on an exchange of shares the company by which shares were issued was permitted to apply any share premium thereon in reducing or eliminating any intangible element in the purchase price of the shares acquired. This suggestion was rejected by the Company Law Committee (paragraph 165) 'since it might indirectly permit the distribution of the share premium account if there was a surplus . . . on the subsequent realization of the shares'. In the view of the Council however this danger could be prevented by a provision that, so long as the investment was retained, the balance sheet should disclose the amount of share premium applied in arriving at its net book amount, and that upon realization or revaluation of the investment any surplus should be applied first in restoring to the share premium account the amount of it which had been so applied. With such a provision, the application of the share premium account in this manner would be no more than a matter of presentation and would not relax the restrictions on distribution.

Submission

18. When an amount has been credited to the share premium account (or, in the case of shares having no par value, stated capital account) in respect of shares issued as consideration for shares of another company, it should be permissible to apply in reducing the book amount of the investment so acquired such part of the credit as represents an excess of the amount attributed to the consideration over the part thereof which was fairly attributable to the net tangible assets of the other company whereby the vestment was represented at the time when it was cquired, provided that:

(a) so long as the investment or any part of it is retained, the accounts shall disclose, and continue to disclose, the amount of share premium applied in arriving at its net book amount;

(b) on revaluation or realization of the investment (whether represented by the shares originally acquired or by other shares obtained through a process of exchange or conversion or through the receipt of additional shares issued as fully-paid in capitalization of reserves), any surplus shall be applied first in restoring that amount to the share premium account.

Share Discounts

19. The considerations which determine whether a premium arises on the issue of shares for a consideration other than cash would also apply in determining whether such issues take place at discount. So long as shares may not be issued at a discount except with the consent of the Court it is necessary to consider how this rule should apply to transactions involving the concurrent issue of shares of two classes, one of which is currently worth more than par and the other worth less. Such a situation arises when, for example, one of the two classes consists of preference shares of a class already in issue whose fixed dividend is below the current market rate. It is also necessary to consider whether, in order not to hamper reconstructions and amalgamations, some dispensation should be given for shares of an existing class which are being offered in whole or part exchange for shares of another company. There have been a number of cases in recent years in which it has been convenient to offer in exchange in an appropriate ratio for share capital of subsidiaries preference shares of the holding company of a class already in issue whose rate of dividend is lower than the current market rate.

Submissions

20. It should be made clear that when shares of more than one class are issued as part of the same transaction, the question whether a premium or discount arises should be determined by reference to the issue as a whole.

21. It should be permissible without the consent of the Court for preference shares of an existing class to be issued at a discount in whole or part satisfaction of the consideration for shares of another company.

Use of Experts' Names in Company Circulars

22. In paragraph 294 (k) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that a statement purporting to be made by an expert should not be quoted without the consent of the expert concerned in any circular containing a take-over offer or recommendation by the directors of the offeree company to accept such an offer. The Council supports this recommendation but thinks it is too restricted.

Submission

23. An expert's consent should be required in writing as regards the use of his name in any circular recommending rejection as well as acceptance of an offer.

Distribution of Profits

General

24. The Council agrees with the Company Law Committee that the law with regard to the distribution of profits by limited companies should be clarified by the inclusion of certain rules in the Companies Act, and it accepts the principles underlying the recommendations in paragraphs 350 (a), (b) and (c) of the Committee's report.

25. The scope of these recommendations will however need careful definition, fundamentally because in present conditions much of the capital of business undertakings is represented by assets of which the book amount is in course of being charged to revenue. In that respect there is no essential difference between an investment in plant, technically a fixed asset and an investment in the raw materials of stock-in-trade, technically a current asset; both represent an outlay of capital and in both cases the book amount of the asset is charged against revenue as the asset is used up in the ordinary course of the business. It follows that when a fixed asset which has been written down out of revenue is sold for more than its written down value it is arguable whether the surplus is a 'capital' gain or in some part a recovery of the amounts charged against revenue. Again, it can be argued that sales of plant, vehicles and the like are a regular and continuing feature of the operations of any business in which such assets require to be displaced when they wear out or become obsolete; therefore any profits or losses on such disposals should be regarded as incidental to the trading operations and normally treated as 'revenue'. In that event whether profits or losses on particular disposals should be regarded as 'capital' or 'revenue' might be a question of degree or circumstances rather than of any inherent characteristic. Again, it may be found necessary, for example, because of obsolescence resulting from some change in policy or in technique of manufacture, to write down existing plant by a substantial additional amount or to dispose of it at a price substantially lower than its written down value. A loss of this kind, if material and exceptional, would be disclosed as such in the accounts, but it is arguable whether the loss would be 'capital' or 'revenue' and indeed whether it is desirable to try to make this distinction. There are strong arguments for dealing with all such losses through the profit and loss account; and yet in the final result losses which erode the net assets by which share and loan capital are represented amount to a loss of capital, whatever their causes.

26. Account also needs to be taken of the fact that upon a decision to sell an asset which has hitherto been held as a fixed asset, for example, the shares in a subsidiary, it may be proper to transfer the item into the category of current assets before the sale is actually made; and of the fact that when a fixed asset such as plant and machinery has been written up on revaluation (giving rise to an unrealized surplus) the subsequent accumulation out of income of provisions for diminution of the increased value is equivalent to a realization by that means of the surplus.

27. Finally, attention needs to be given to the manner in which the recommendations would apply to the profits and losses represented by premiums and discounts on loan capital, bearing in mind that it may be proper to deal with these through the profit and loss account over the period to completion of redemption.

Submissions

28. The profits or surpluses to which Recommendations 350 (a) and (b) of the Company Law Committee should apply are:

(a) those which result from the disposal or revaluation of an asset of a kind which in the ordinary course of the company's business is not held as a current asset;

(b) in the case of 350 (a), premiums realized on the issue and discounts realized on the redemption (whether by repayment or by purchase and cancellation) of loan capital of the company.

29. The amount of profits or surpluses to which Recommendations 350 (a) and (b) should apply should be limited:

as regards those under paragraph 28 (a) above, to the amount by which the profit or surplus remains in excess of the aggregate to date of any amounts charged against revenue for depreciation (including obsolescence), amortization or diminution in value of the asset concerned; as regards the premiums in paragraph 28 (b) above, to such part of the premium as is currently attributable to the unexpired period to redemption of that part of the relevant loan capital which has not yet been redeemed.

30. The losses to which Recommendation 350 (c) of the Company Law Committee should apply are all losses of whatever origin except:

(a) those which result from the disposal or writing down of an asset of a kind which in the ordinary course of the company's business is not held as a current asset and in that ordinary course is not the subject of regular charges against revenue for depreciation (including obsolescence) or amortization or diminution in value;

(b) discount on the issue of share capital;

(c) such part of any discount on the issue of loan capital as is currently attributable to the unexpired period to redemption of the amount of the relevant loan capital which has not yet been redeemed.

31. Since the profits and losses defined by these submissions do not necessarily coincide with those to which, according to circumstances, the descriptions 'capital' or 'revenue' may be applied, any relevant legislation should avoid using these terms in this context or, if it does use them, should make it plain that they are used in a special sense which is not necessarily applicable outside the particular context.

Past losses

32. The adoption of Recommendation 350 (c) would involve a change in the existing law under which the Courts have decided that current income may be distributed irrespective of past losses. This change could be open to objection in some circumstances, for instance by the holders of non-cumulative preference shares who would be denied any dividends until current income had been applied in making good a deficiency in the net assets by which lower-ranking share capital was represented, or by a purchaser who had acquired the share capital of a currently profitable company at a price which took full account of its accumulation of past losses. In such circumstances the prospects of the business could be such as to make a formal reduction of capital unnecessary and undesirable, especially if there were grounds for foreseeing that with reasonable retentions of current income the deficiency would in due course be made good.

Submission

33. If Recommendation 350 (c) of the Company Law Committee is adopted, consideration should be given to the provision of a procedure whereby limited companies could obtain authority from the Court (or if thought fit the Board of Trade), subject to such conditions as the Court (or Board of Trade) might impose, to distribute current income without the necessity for making a formal reduction of capital.

Pre-acquisition profits

34. The Council agrees in principle with the view of the Company Law Committee that a company which acquires shares in another should not regard as profit dividends received out of distributable funds which had already accumulated when the shares were acquired and therefore formed part of the equitable interest which was evaluated in the purchase price.

35. Circumstances may however arise in which the accumulated distributable reserves which are applicable to the shares acquired exceed the purchase price of the shares, for example when a purchase of a controlling interest is made on particularly favourable terms because the purchaser company is in a position to make good some deficiency of current management or of technical development which would otherwise have threatened the other company's continuation as a going concern. Such circumstances could provide an exception to the general rule inasmuch as any margin by which the dividends subsequently received out of the pre-acquisition reserves cumulatively exceeded the cost of the shares would properly be regarded as a profit of the purchaser company.

36. The other exception, for which the Company Law Committee recognized a necessity, relates to the treatment of dividends received out of pre-acquisition reserves when the shares on which these dividends are paid were acquired in whole or in part by the issue in exchange of paid up shares of the acquiring company. In an important respect this type of transaction differs from a purchase of shares for cash. On a purchase for cash the interests of the former holders of the acquired shares, including their interest in distributable reserves, are discharged by a payment out of the acquiring company's assets and the shareholders of the acquiring company remain unchanged; on an exchange of shares the former holders of the acquired shares are not paid out but, to the extent of the shares which they receive, are brought in as participants with the former shareholders of the acquiring company in an enlarged share capital of the latter and thus continue to have a participation in the equity of the acquired company. If in such circumstances no exception is made to the rule that dividends received by the acquiring company out of the other company's pre-acquisition reserves may not thereafter be distributed to the acquiring company's shareholders, the consequence is that despite the enlargement of that body of shareholders there is no enlargement of the reserves to which it could look for the payment of dividends and the amount per share of distributable reserves becomes diminished. In short, by reason of a mere exchange of share certificates distributable funds which have accumulated within the limited company system become barred from distribution.

37. It is arguable that an acqusition of shares by the issue in exchange of fully paid shares which can then be sold readily on the market (often at a guaranteed price) is tantamount to an issue and purchase of shares for cash. In the latter case however the subscribers and the vendors would be different bodies of persons with differing interests. The subscribers, unless they happened to be existing shareholders, would have no pre-subscription interest in the distributability of reserves; the vendors would encash the whole of their interests and thereafter be no longer concerned in the distributability of reserves. On the other hand in an exchange of shares the 'subscribers' and the vendors are the same body of persons, and the shareholders of both companies have an existing interest in the distributability of reserves which, unless they decide to encash their shares, will continue. It is this which would make the loss of distributability an important obstacle in the way of beneficial schemes for share exchanges.

38. The Company Law Committee recognized the existence of this obstacle. The Council is in full agreement with the Committee that a solution of the difficulty needs to be found.

39. As a matter of accounting the pre-acquisition reserves attributable to the shares acquired would initially be reflected in the balance sheet of the acquiring company in the amount credited to its share capital and share premium accounts (or the stated capital account) in respect of the consideration for the shares which it had issued in exchange. In those conditions the subsequent receipt of dividends out of the pre-acquisition reserves of the acquired company would produce a distributable surplus in the accounts of the acquiring company only in so far as cumulatively they exceeded this consideration. Up to the limit of the consideration the dividends would represent recoveries of the cost of the shares acquired and would require to be applied in reduction of the cost of the investment. If it were desired to enable the dividends to be passed on to the acquiring company's shareholders, their release for that purpose would necessitate the use in their stead of an equivalent amount of other reserves of the acquiring company to write down the cost of the investment.

40. The solution propounded by the Company Law Committee followed this reasoning and contemplated that in appropriate cases part of any premium on the shares issued in exchange should be credited not to the share premium account but to another account, which could then be used to write down the amount of the investment in the acquired shares and thus free for distribution an equivalent amount of dividends received out of the pre-acquisition reserves of the acquired company.

41. However, in formulating its relevant recommendations, the Committee was influenced by the fear that, if by exchanges of shares companies could 'buy profits' which they could then themselves distribute in dividend, these dividends would mislead the public. Because of this danger the Committee limited the recommendations to acquisitions of at least 90 per cent of the equity share capital and further limited the scope of the solution by recommending that, except where the Court permitted otherwise, it should apply only on the formation of a new holding company and then to the treatment by that company of the distributable reserves of not more than one of the companies acquired. The Committee considered that this limited solution would suffice because 'none of the witnesses whom we questioned on this matter produced any evidence that the general rule had caused or was likely to cause serious hardship'.

42. The Council accepts that in practice the loss of distributability which results from applying the general rule that dividends out of pre-acquisition profits of another company should not be available for distribution by the recipient company does not often cause hardship. It does however greatly influence and often distort the form of the schemes under which shares are exchanged. Those who formulate such schemes have to be at pains to avoid a situation in which hardship might be caused or avoidable objections taken, but would be likely to take all possible steps to avoid what is conceived to be the expense and delay of making an application to the Court.

43. It is this aspect which impresses the Council and leaves it in no doubt that the solution propounded by the Company Law Committee does not go far enough. Decisions on whether to form a new holding company in preference to using an existing company or on which of two existing companies should become the holding company of the other ought to be taken on their merits. It is most undesirable that schemes involving such decisions should be forced into unnatural patterns by a need to accommodate them, if only as a precaution, to technical provisions of the company law; the Council holds this view strongly.

44. It appears to the Council that any danger of the public being misled would be prevented by proper accounting treatment, by full disclosure of the source of the distributions made by the acquiring company and by segregation for that purpose from its own income of the dividends which it receives out of other companies' pre-acquisition reserves. With such segregation and disclosure the Council urges that a dispensation in regard to distribution of dividends received out of the pre-acquisition reserves attributable to shares acquired by an exchange of shares should be available generally and should not be narrowly confined in the manner which the Company Law Committee recommended.

45. The following submissions, which develop the suggestions made in paragraphs 346 and 347 of the report of the Company Law Committee, aim at meeting the fears expressed in paragraph 345 of that report by securing that, unless the Court orders otherwise, any sums which a shareholder company is permitted to distribute out of dividends from pre-acquisition reserves (other than any cumulative excess of such dividends over the consideration for the shares in respect of which they are received) do not affect its profit and loss account but are, and continue to be, reflected in a special reserve account until with full disclosure they are distributed by the company to its own shareholders out of that account.

Submissions

46. Any company which holds shares in another and receives distributions out of pre-acquisition funds of the other company should be free to treat as profit the amount, if any, by which such distributions cumulatively exceed the consideration which was given for the shares.

47. Subject to and within the limits of the special conditions stated below, any company (hereinafter described as 'the recipient company') which has acquired equity shares in another for a consideration consisting wholly or in part of shares of its own issued in exchange should be permitted to distribute to its own shareholders dividends received out of the other company's pre-acquisition reserves notwithstanding that such dividends have not cumulatively exceeded the consideration which was given for the shares acquired. The special conditions should be as follows.

(a) The aggregate amount so distributed by the recipient company shall not in any event exceed the premium, if any, on the shares which it issued in exchange or, if these shares had no par value, the amount at which they were credited to the stated capital account.

(b) Before presenting its accounts for the financial period within which the exchange of shares took place the recipient company shall have appropriated out of its share premium account (or stated capital account) the amount, within the limits of (a) above, which it elects to be permitted so to distribute and shall have carried that amount to a special reserve account. The appropriation shall be disclosed in those accounts.

(c) Unless the dividends received out of the other company's pre-acquisition reserves are applied in reducing the book amount of the recipient company's investment, an equivalent amount shall be so applied out of the special reserve account and the latter shall be replenished by crediting the dividends received thereto.

(d) Any distributions by the recipient company to its own shareholders out of the funds provided by such dividends shall be made out of the special reserve account and shall accordingly be limited to the amount standing at the credit of that account.

(e) Upon the declaration of any distribution out of the special reserve account the fact that it is payable out of that account shall be stated.

(f) The extent to which the balance at the credit of the special reserve account has been or is proposed to be so distributed in any financial period shall be disclosed in the accounts presented to the shareholders in respect of that period.

The Court should have power to vary or dispense with these special conditions or any of them.

Disqualification for Appointment as Auditor

48. In paragraph 63 (a) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that the distinction between exempt and non-exempt private companies should be ended and the present special privileges of the exempt private company be abolished. If adopted this would automatically repeal the proviso to section 161 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, with the effect that the prohibition against the appointment as auditor of a partner of a director, officer or servant of a company would extend to all companies.

49. In its evidence to the Jenkins Committee the Council expressed its views on the audit concessions available to exempt private companies under the Companies Act, 1948, and disclosed that there are differences of opinion within the accountancy profession on the point. Nevertheless, the Council would again stress that it has seen no evidence of abuse of the concession which permits an auditor to be the partner of a director, officer or servant of an exempt private company; on the contrary, the Council wishes to emphasize the practical benefits which many smaller companies have derived through availing themselves of the privileged relationship which the law has permitted them to establish with the professional firms which serve them as auditors. By this means they have had ready access to professional advice and assistance which has contributed much to their efficient running and in some circumstances may have been instrumental in assuring their continuance through difficult periods.

50. The Jenkins Committee went on to say that if the introduction of an unqualified prohibition of the appointment of partners or directors, officers or servants as auditors of a company was likely to cause practical difficulties in particular cases they hoped that suitable transitional provisions could be designed to deal with them. The Council has directed its attention to this aspect of the problem.

Submission

51. If the proviso to section 161 (2) of the Companies Act, 1948, is to be repealed, so that all companies will be prohibited from appointing as auditor a partner of a director, officer or servant of the company, then provision should be made for a transitional period of ten years from the date of coming into effect of amending legislation before auditors who were partners of directors, officers or servants of a company at that date and continuously since should be disqualified for reappointment. (This would follow the precedent set for similar, though not identical, circumstances in section 25 (4) of the Building Societies Act, 1964.)

Change of Auditors before Expiry of Term of Office

52. In paragraphs 435 (f) and (g) of their report the Jenkins Committee recommend that an auditor should be empowered to resign during his period of office, and that if during his period of office he ceases to be qualified for appointment as auditor, or becomes positively disqualified, he should automatically relinquish his office. The Council supports these recommendations, and considers that provision should also be made to meet the difficulties which may be caused to companies if they are prevented from discharging their statutory accounting and auditing obligations by reason of the inability of a duly appointed auditor, for example through ill health, to carry out his duties in time. The Council understands that at least one instance of such a difficulty has recently occurred under the Building

Societies legislation and the possibility of similar difficulties arising under the Companies Act may readily be envisaged.

Submission

53. If a company is hindered or prevented from complying with the requirement of the Act to lay audited accounts before members through failure of the duly appointed auditor to carry out his duties, the Board of Trade should have power, on an application from the company, to intervene. If the Board of Trade is satisfied that there are grounds for its intervention, it should be empowered to suspend the duly appointed auditor's rights and duties as conferred on him by sections 162 (1), (2) and (3) of the Companies Act, 1948 (though in all other respects his appointment should continue in accordance with law), and vest them instead in an auditor appointed by the Board of Trade. The auditor so appointed should hold office only until the conclusion of the next annual general meeting after his appointment. He should be given similar rights to those under section 162 (4) of the Act, to receive circulars and attend meetings. His remuneration should be fixed by the Board of Trade and payable by the company.

Weekly Notes

THE ASSOCIATION'S NEW PRESIDENT

MR GEORGE LEANING BARKER, F.A.C.C.A., was elected President of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants last Tuesday, as reported elsewhere in this issue.

Mr G. L. Barker

Mr Barker, who also served as President of the Association during 1961–62, is in practice on his own account in Scarborough, Preston and London and is consultant to the firm of George L. Barker & Co, Certified Accountants, of Leeds. He qualified as a member of the former London Association of Accountants in 1933 and commenced his own practice in Leeds in 1938. Elected to the Council of the Association in 1951, Mr Barker has served on all the standing committees of the Council and is at present chairman of the Members Advisory Committee.

He has played a prominent part in district society affairs and is a former Secretary and President of the West Yorkshire District Society of the Association, now the Leeds and District Society. In addition, he has been Secretary of the West Yorkshire Students' Society and of the Yorkshire Area Council of the Association. Mr Barker is a director of a number of companies and has taken an active interest in trade association work in Yorkshire for over thirty years.

Mr William Sholto Olleson, T.D., F.A.C.C.A., of Newcastle upon Tyne, has been elected Vice-President. Mr Olleson is in practice on his own account and is a director of a number of companies in North-east England.

THE CRITICAL TREND

ACCORDING to the unemployment figures released this week by the Ministry of Labour, the percentage of unemployed has dropped from 1·6 to 1·5 per cent over the last month to reach the lowest April level for four years. With the drop in unemployment has come an increase in vacancies and the number officially recorded has reached the highest level since September 1955, nearly ten years ago.

The critical factor is, however, that with unemployment at 341,000 and unfilled vacancies at 408,000, the upward trend of vacancies has gone above the downward trend in unemployment and this is taken as one of the rule-of-thumb indications that a potentially dangerous inflationary situation exists. It underlines the remarks of the Prime Minister over the week-end when he told one of the trade union conferences that the country could no longer look for increased production from fuller employment of unemployed resources.

The biggest decline in unemployment has occurred in the Midlands, South-western region and Scotland. The highest area of unemployment is still Northern Ireland with 6·6 per cent unemployed, but even this month Scotland has still a percentage of 3·1 and Wales 2·5. In these areas unemployment still exceeds vacancies which means that the difficulty of getting labour is particularly acute in the Midlands and the South-east.

PLANNING FOR GROWTH

IN the latest of its progress reports the Department of Economic Affairs has produced figures of the growth target it has set for the United Kingdom up to 1970, with comparative growth rates in the past for some other countries.

The Government has set its growth rate at 25 per cent of the gross domestic product by 1970 and this will require a sustained increase in productivity from the recent average of under 3 per cent a year to 3½ per cent. If this is to be achieved the balance of payments must be strengthened, for the rapid expansion of the economy in 1964 was achieved by running up a heavy balance of payments deficit. Particular attention will need to be paid to exports. They will have to increase faster than the 4½ per cent a year rise in value which they have averaged over the last ten years. Higher output from industry will also have to be achieved through higher productivity rather than from an increased labour force.

One important factor affecting the growth of productivity is the amount of output being ploughed back into capital investment. Between 1950 and 1960 the average ratio of gross domestic investment to gross national product in Britain was about 16½ per cent which was rather lower than the ratio in France and in the United States and about two-thirds that of Germany.

RHODESIA AND SANCTIONS

IN a White Paper issued this week the Rhodesian Government has indicated in very general terms the counter-measures it would take if economic sanctions were applied to Southern Rhodesia if it declared independence unilaterally. The White Paper points out that it would not be in the best interests of Rhodesia if its proposed measures were known in advance, but it has given some general indication of the plan in mind.

It would, for example, consider the repatriation of foreign workers to their home countries, Zambia and Malawi, to protect its own indigenous labour force. The number affected is estimated to be 500,000. This would mean, in effect, that Southern Rhodesia would directly export the unemployed created by sanctions to its neighbouring African-controlled independent countries within the Commonwealth. This claimed ability to pass on economic depression to nearby African communities is a threat to two new African countries where it would hurt most.

Rhodesia, it is claimed, could obtain elsewhere all imports at present coming from within the Commonwealth and a high proportion of the country's exports could be marketed in other countries with whom Rhodesia has trading relations. It is claimed that the withdrawal of Commonwealth preference would be injurious to countries within the Commonwealth exporting to Rhodesia which grants as much as 30 per cent preference in some cases. It has admitted that tobacco exports are a critical factor but confidence is expressed that other markets could be found.

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 274

IT makes me feel rather small by comparison when I read in the financial columns of the daily Press about the exploits of some of the leading members of the profession. They are appointed to important directorships, even to the chairman's post, and guide and control industrial empires. They succeed where others have failed; they reorganize businesses and balance sheets; they plan giant mergers and take-overs.

There is legitimate pride in their distinctions, which reflect so creditably on the profession, but it is not unmixed with a tinge of envy. To achieve anything comparable in my limited sphere is difficult, if not impossible. The accountant in minor industry must often be content with a lowly path to tread. Milton claims that 'they also serve who only stand and wait', and we appreciate that not everyone can, or even should necessarily, post o'er land and ocean without rest, but we'd like to present our true account sometimes rather than be misunderstood.

During the last week or so I've been conscious of personally presenting an undesirable accountancy image, pernickety, small-minded, and over-cautious. At a directors' meeting the deputy-chairman was inveighing against a falling-off in overall turnover for the two previous months; this calamity, he alleged, was due to stock shortages arising from pressure by the accounts department to keep the inventory at a minimum level. I pointed out firmly that the board had always adopted a budgetary control policy of minimizing stocks in order to reduce the half-yearly charge for interest on bank overdraft. Turning stocks at least six times yearly enabled us to maintain a valuable inventory/sales ratio as an index to progress. The managing director mused in whimsical style about the joy of doubling our stocks with resultant overflowing gross profits. 'Not so much a policy as a way of living it up', he remarked, pooh-poohing my down-to-earth reference to doubling our overdraft as being over-cautious. 'Let the bank worry about that one', he smiled, 'how far can we afford to push our limit?'

Our borrowing powers are limited by a clause in our ancient articles linking the maximum to our issued capital. Obviously the overdraft varies with seasonal trading peaks, declining before Christmas and through the summer to a reasonable point. If, therefore, I commented, any additional heavy outlay envisaged could be spread over a long period we could conceivably hope to absorb it, subject to doing a special study on the timing of the operation with the sales manager.

Feeling that this offer sounded at once heavy-handed and nebulous, I tried to be helpfully constructive by pointing out that our bank limit could be raised by way of resolution at the next annual general meeting. The shareholders would appreciate the need to plough back our profits; we could draft an informative circular . . . the chairman interrupted at this stage. His expression betokened marked distaste. He doesn't like explaining involved financial matters to shareholders. When they ask long-drawn-out questions, with barbed clauses like: 'Should the answer to part 1 of the first section be in the affirmative, can we assume . . . ?' he looks rather like James Thurber's brother who 'always half suspected that something would "get him" in the night'. We'd have to make some other arrangement, he said optimistically but firmly, like short-term borrowing at a cheap percentage, perhaps below current Bank rate. Oh yes?

Finally, the managing director summed up by stressing the overall uncertainty of the operation, what with rising costs, unpredictable turnover, and the incalculable nature of many of the factors. 'Let's just play it by ear at this stage', he urged, an old-fashioned policy which seemed to suit everyone but me. I wonder what would happen to all of us if some high-powered tycoon bought over the company and reorganized it from top to bottom . . . perhaps it's better not to know . . . he might not have much use for a pernickety, over-cautious accountant.

Ross Group

THE accounts of Ross Group Ltd, from which this week's reprint is taken, provide a view of a company which, like the Bath and Portland Group whose accounts were recently the subject of comment in this column, has developed into many new spheres in recent years but whose development has been a logical process. Originally, Ross Group was purely a trawling company.

Development, however, has taken the group into fish distribution, into frozen foods, transport, poultry, and chemical and agricultural services. Of the 1964 turnover of £76 million, £21·5 million came from frozen foods making that division the biggest in the group.

Fish and ancillary trades brought £18·5 million of turnover; poultry £18 million; fresh foods, wholesale and retail, £7 million; motors and transport £5·9 million; and chemicals and agricultural services £5·1 million. Turnover rose by £14 million on 1963 and of the increase frozen food supplied £5·5 million, fish £2·2 million, poultry £2·8 million, fresh foods £1 million, motors and transport £1·4 million and chemicals and agricultural services £1·1 million.

Development

The real growth of the group through diversification and acquisitions began in 1959 and in that respect the company's ten-year record is of considerable importance, particularly since the record provides a clear view of the rise in ordinary share capital (for space reasons only six years are shown in the reprint).

Development has been financed by a series of acquisition and rights issues and, as the reprint shows, issued ordinary capital rose from £625,000 to £13,775,503 between 1958 and 1964. The character of the Ross Group was substantially changed four years ago when Sterling Poultry Products was acquired, an event which was followed by other acquisitions in the same field.

The last acquisition in the food sphere was of the Waterworth Group of Companies, fruit and vegetable retailers based on Liverpool, and operating 260 shops. The Waterworth company was acquired on the last day of the financial year under review. Assets have been consolidated in the group accounts but there is naturally no profit contribution.

Waterworth's profits at the time of acquisition were £238,000 and, although higher profits are anticipated this year, Ross Group has to find the interest charge on the purchase consideration of £2 million.

the accounts have been funded by an issue of £5 million 6¾ per cent debentures, the stock being placed at £97½ per cent. At the same time the group made an acquisition in its original sphere – the purchase of the Cramplin Steam Fishing Company operating five trawlers from Grimsby.

The Ross Group balance sheet also reflects a point of retrenchment rather than fresh development. Part of the increase in trade investments and loans is attributable to the receipt in November 1963 of 200,000 ordinary 5s shares in Fitzroy Finance Ltd in return for the share capital of Ross's hire-purchase subsidiary, Witham Finance Ltd. The exchange also accounts for the elimination of the 'Balances on hire-purchase customers' accounts' from the balance sheet.

But development in the food industry has not resulted in any running down of the group's original trawling interests. Including four vessels on order, the fleet consists of sixty-five vessels. The 'Ross Daring' class of semi-automated near water trawlers is fishing successfully and a new class of middle water trawlers is being built. These trawlers, because of

The appropriate adjustment in respect of the pre-acquisition element of these profits has been made in the Accounts. The offer on behalf of Ross Group Limited to the Shareholders of Waterworth Bros., Limited to acquire the whole of the Issued Share Capital of that Company became unconditional on 23rd September 1964 (but for the purpose of these accounts this has been treated as being effective on 30th September 1964) and following the application of Section 209 of the Companies Act 1948 the whole of the share capital of Waterworth Bros. Ltd. has been acquired. The net assets of the Waterworth Bros., Limited Group and provision for the cost of acquisition are included in the Consolidated Accounts. No part of the trading results of Waterworth Bros., Limited for periods to the 30th September 1964 are included in the Consolidated Profit and Loss Account.

More Urgency

Mr J. Carl Ross, commenting on the position of the fishing industry, expresses disappointment that the White Fish Authority, the statutory body responsible for the healthy development of the industry, appears to receive inadequate support from Government departments. He cites, as an example, an Improvement Grants Scheme placed before Parliament in July last year.

The only outstanding detail was that the departments concerned should agree the particular improvements that would qualify for a[illegible] has been heard on the point. [illegible] Ross says, is fortunate in being [illegible] own fleet without waiting. Other[illegible] tunate.

Extensions to various fishing limit[illegible] waters and a structure of subsidy p[illegible]hat places fish at a distinct disadvantage in[illegible]tion to other foodstuffs are two of the foremost problems facing the industry. 'Strangers to the industry', Mr Ross comments, 'are apt to overlook the fact that both (problems) arise as a result of Government policy. The industry feels that the present situation calls for a greater sense of urgency than that shown by Government departments so far.'

CITY NOTES

THE Finance Bill, with all its complications, is hardly likely to open the floodgates presently holding back investment money from the stock-market. Even under present technically favourable conditions the equity sections of the market find headway hard to make – and yet only a modest volume of buying would be enough to improve prices. Institutional money is still more likely to find a home in high-yielding fixed interest stocks and in the short-term bond market than it is in equities.

What buying there is in the stock-market is largely on small investor account and the small investor's hope still springs eternally.

Bank rate reduction hopes have helped keep the gilt-edged market firm and the continued improvement in sterling is assisting the market tone. The discount on the three months' forward rate is now at its lowest since Bank rate was raised to 7 per cent last November.

THE final prospectus for the proposed Federation of Stock Exchanges has now been issued, nearly three years after the joint co-ordination committee was first set up. In the event of a sufficient number of Exchanges signifying their willingness to join the Federation by June 2nd, 1965, a formal resolution ratifying the proposals and establishing the Federation will be sent to all acceptors, who will be required to pass this resolution in time for the Federation to be established on July 1st this year.

The Federation is of The London Stock Exchange with 3,480 members in 270 broking and sixty jobbing firms, the Associated Stock Exchanges with 880 members and 320 firms, mainly brokers but some with dual broking and jobbing functions, and the Provincial Brokers' Stock Exchange with 220 members in 133 firms in 110 towns in Great Britain, Ireland, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

Fleming v. Bellow Machine Co Ltd

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
March 24th, 1965
(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Trade – Agencies – Grant of sub-agency – Sums received therefor – Whether taxable receipts – Income Tax Act, 1952, Schedule D, Case I.

The company carried on business as a manufacturer of sewing machines, as a distributor of sewing machines manufactured by other concerns, and as the operator of a foundry. It was agreed that for the purposes of this case the second of these activities should be regarded as the only business of the company.

The company held a number of agencies, and during the relevant period the most important agency was for a German company, G. M. Pfaff, A.G. This agency was carried on under an agreement, which gave the respondent company the right to sell Pfaff products in the United Kingdom, but the agreement became valid only after the respondent company had made a sub-agency agreement with another United Kingdom company. A sub-agency agreement with the other United Kingdom company was made, and in consideration therefor the respondent company received £5,000 in December 1958, and £3,750 in April 1959, before the agreement was signed, and a further £3,750 on the signing thereof. Only the sums of £3,750 each were in issue in this appeal.

The agreement with Pfaff provided for the respondent company to buy machines from Pfaff at a discount, and under the sub-agency agreement the other United Kingdom company bought machines from the respondent at a smaller discount, and sold them to the public at Pfaff's list prices. In 1958 the total of the receipts of the respondent from the Pfaff agency was £123,328, and from other agencies £96,562, and thus the Pfaff agency represented 78·30 per cent. For 1959 the corresponding figures were £215,480, in total, and £184,320 from Pfaff, namely, 85·78 per cent. For 1960 the total was £349,701, and the Pfaff agency contributed £239,550, namely, 68·50 per cent. For 1960 the total was £331,232, of which £200,625 came from the Pfaff agency, i.e. 60·46 per cent.

It was contended by the appellant that the two sums of £3,750 were receipts in the ordinary course of the respondent company's business, and were includible in its Case I computations. It was contended for the respondent that the granting of the sub-agency was the parting with a substantial part of its business undertaking; and that the principle of Van den Berghs Ltd v. Clarke was applicable. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the Pfaff agreement did not relate to the whole structure of the respondent company's business, nor was it the fixed framework within which its circulating capital operated; it was merely one of several agency agreements; and the sums in question were taxable receipts of the respondent company's trade.

Lewis Emanuel & Son Ltd v. White

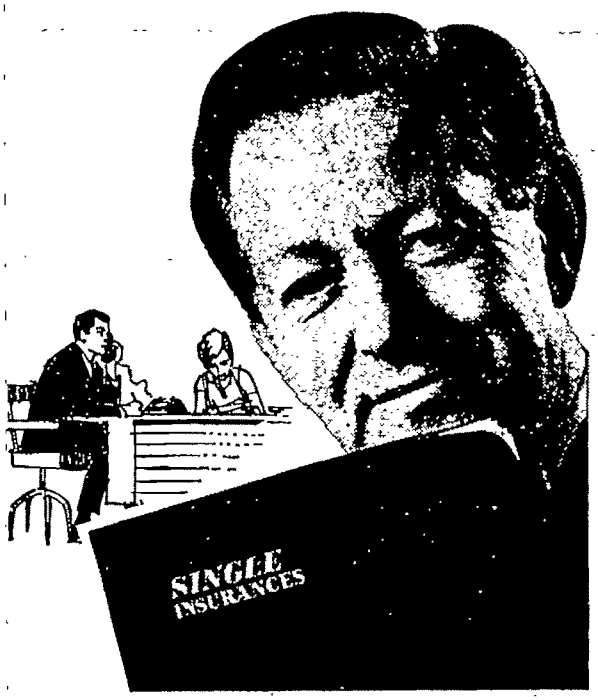
In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
March 26th, 1965
(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)



Income tax – Trade – Loss claim – Fruit and vegetable merchanting business – Changed to buying and selling stocks and shares – Whether carrying on a business of that kind – Objects clause unchanged – Companies Act, 1948, section 147 – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 341.

The appellant company was incorporated in 1944 to acquire the fruit and vegetable merchanting business carried on theretofore, and at all relevant times this business was carried on. In 1958 the company suffered a heavy loss in consequence of a strike, and at the end of that year the company began to buy and sell Stock Exchange securities, advice having been obtained that the company had power to do so.

The managing director had a layman's knowledge of the stock-markets, and he used his own judgement in the buying and selling of stocks and shares. Most of the stocks and shares bought were rapidly resold, but some were retained as security for the overdraft. During 1959–60 and 1960–61 a very large number of transactions took place, but they resulted in a loss of £2,518 for the first of those years and of £4,951 for the second year. In the balance sheets as at March 31st, 1959, and March 31st, 1960, the stocks and shares were shown as investments, and at cost, the market value also being given; and there was no separate trading account relating to Stock Exchange transactions, though the profit and loss account showed 'Losses less profits [or vice versa] on deals in stocks and shares'. For 1961 and 1962 the balance sheets showed the stocks and shares as investments at market value, and there was a trading and profit and loss account, 'Dealings in Stocks and Shares'. No part of the company's expenses was allocated to this account.

It was contended for the company that for 1960–61 and 1961–62 it was carrying on the trade of a dealer in stocks and shares; and that it was entitled to relief under section 341 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, in respect of the losses for those years. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the true view of the facts of the case was that the company was merely a speculator in stocks and shares. The Special Commissioners decided that the company was engaged in a trade of buying and selling stocks and shares in the tax years in question.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Spare 30 seconds to see just how simple your insurances can be

So your company's insurances seem complicated? Well, we agree insurance can be complex if you cover risks piecemeal with different policies, different renewal dates, different companies. But it takes only half a minute to realise that nowadays the insurance needs of professional men needn't involve a separate policy for every aspect of building and business.

SINGLE POLICY, WIDE COVER

A Norwich Union 'Single' Policy for the professions gives cover against damage to both building and contents from such diverse causes as burglary, fire, storm and flood. It can also cover you against consequential loss, employer's liability, plate glass and other risks.

It's taken less than 30 seconds to read so far: why not spare a few more seconds to ring your insurance broker or local Norwich Union office? And make a note to pass on their advice to your clients too—it's good business!

LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY

TOTAL ASSETS REACH £126 million

Mr Norman D. Ellis on Penalizing Capital Gains Tax

The annual general meeting of the Leicester Permanent Building Society was held on April 12th in Leicester.

Mr Norman D. Ellis, M.A., J.P. (Chairman), presided and, in the course of his speech, said:

Although 1964 was a year of changing fortunes for building societies we have every reason to feel satisfied with our final results.

What then did the Leicester Permanent do in 1964?

Receipts from investors amounted to £36,347,214, an increase of £6,605,151 and withdrawals at £18,097,959 showed an increase of £4,791,742.

The amount advanced on mortgage increased from £26,149,018 in 1963 to £31,927,355, and one-half of this amount was lent on newly built houses.

Our total assets increased by £20,250,249 and now amount to £125,925,959.

Our total liquid funds amount to £14,243,763, of which £12,419,079 was in the form of cash or Government Securities and therefore immediately available.

I would like to repeat a plea which I made early last year for a revision of the maximum figure of £5,000 for an individual investment. This limit has now been operative for forty years and should be increased substantially or abolished entirely.

In view of the shortage of funds and the increases in taxation, we decided in December to increase the rate of interest on paid-up shares to 3¾ per cent and at the same time to increase the rate on new mortgages to owner occupiers to 6¾ per cent. Existing borrowers were not affected until April 1st, 1965.

Capital Gains Tax

We are bound by statute to maintain a minimum reserve ratio and keep part of our funds liquid. Our liquid funds are mainly in Government Securities bought below par giving a low current yield. The Chancellor says that the so called 'Capital Gain' which will accrue on or before redemption is to be taxed at a rate of 35 to 40 per cent. We strongly object to being penalized by retrospective taxation. Tax at 35 per cent will deprive our future Reserves of £428,000 and our ability to accept funds for lending will thus be restricted by £20 million. What will be the total volume of funds denied to prospective house owners bearing in mind that building societies have £300 million invested in Government Securities.

THE ASSOCIATION OF CERTIFIED AND CORPORATE ACCOUNTANTS

SIXTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The sixtieth annual general meeting of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants was held in London last Tuesday with the President, Mr R. Statham, C.B.E., J.P., F.A.C.C.A., in the chair.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

In the course of his address the President said:

It is my privilege, as President of the Association, to submit for approval the report of the Council and the accounts of the Association for the year 1964. Before embarking on this, however, I wish to pay tribute to three members of the Council whose services we have lost. I refer to Mr M. F. MacCormac, who resigned in October last, and Mr J. H. Hills and Mr W. E. Stepto, who left us at the end of November.

Mr R. Statham

Of these, Mr Stepto is the senior, having joined the Council in June 1947. He came to us with an already long record of service to the Bristol District Society dating from 1928, first as honorary secretary, then as a member of the executive committee and finally as branch president. Mr Stepto never sought the limelight but he was always there when there was work to be done and we shall miss him. He gave up his business managing directorship early in 1964 and he now takes with him our good wishes for a long and happy retirement. (Applause.)

Mr MacCormac's history is somewhat similar, except that he did not join the Council until 1955. But at that time he had already been for many years a member of the executive committee of the Irish Branch and had served both as honorary secretary and branch president. Unfortunately he has experienced some ill health of recent years and it is this which has precipitated his retirement from the Council, as well as from his practice. We are all happy to know, however, that he is now well on the way to recovery and we join in wishing him a complete and speedy return to good health and a happy retirement. (Applause.)

Mr Hills' time on the Council is of shorter duration, dating from 1957, but into that period he concentrated an extraordinary amount of work for the Association. As chairman of the Taxation and Research Committee he was the driving force behind a number of special projects initiated by the committee, but it is in the field of company law reform that our greatest debt to him lies. He was vice-chairman of our Company Law Committee and was reponsible for the drafting of most of our written evidence to the Jenkins Committee. He was also a member of the team which gave oral evidence and was absolutely tireless in producing background information and statistics for the use of the team. He served as well, of course, on three standing committees and it was a severe blow to us when he decided that pressure of other commitments compelled his resignation from the Council. We accept this decision with reluctance, for we shall sorely miss him, but we cherish the hope that we may nevertheless from time to time be able to persuade him to place his expertise at our disposal on short-time assignments. He takes with him our sincerest thanks for all his splendid work and our good wishes for the future. (Applause.)

Annual Report

The annual report of the Council and the accounts of the Association for 1964 have already been circulated and you will, I hope, be prepared to take them as read. Is that agreed? (Assent signified.) Before moving the adoption of the report and the accounts I have a few observations to make about them and also about other matters affecting the Association.

Membership

The membership of the Association continues to increase, though at a somewhat slower pace than is entirely satisfactory having regard to the inroads of deaths and retirements. The rate of increase is, however, improving and I shall hope to see within a year or so an average annual intake of about five hundred members – which, in my view, is about what is necessary to offset the two factors mentioned and leave a satisfactory net intake.

On the other hand, the number of new students increases every year and we now have the not unimpressive total of more than thirteen thousand, which is, of course, a record. You will notice from the report that the Council continues to devote a good deal of its time to students' affairs and this, I think, will tend to increase. Neither I nor the Council make any apology for this, for it is obviously where our future lies and we should be foolish, indeed, to do otherwise.

Our object is to remain as progressive as possible in our thinking and in our actions. The example for this is a matter of history. As most of you will know, this is the Diamond Jubilee Year of the Association and for that reason alone our thoughts stray back to our founders. But we have more solid reasons for thanking them than merely for the creation of the Association.

The accountancy profession has always been characterized by an excessive rigidity, particularly with regard to training requirements. Our founders were well aware of this. That is why they set up an organization which was prepared to allow its students to train both in the profession and in industry and commerce. Nothing that has happened since has in any way disproved their beliefs. On the contrary, events are slowly but surely confirming the validity of them. The fact that more than 60 per cent of all qualified accountants voluntarily choose a career in industry and commerce has a significance that cannot be overlooked.

With a progressive tradition of this kind behind it our Council has every reason to strive to be forward-thinking and this is the stimulus for the several variations which the Council has made in training requirements during the last five years. Our objective is to maintain a complete flexibility of approach and this has become more than ever necessary by the changes in educational facilities which have taken place in the last decade and the even greater ones which are foreshadowed in the next one.

It is in this light that one should regard the Council's decision to allow full-time theoretical training for the final examinations. It follows a similar decision in respect of the intermediate examination in 1961 and with the exemptions granted to holders of Certificates in Business Studies and other diplomas is part of a grand plan to deal with modern conditions and to allow our students to take maximum advantage of the many new opportunities open to them. Students come to the Association from a variety of sources, from the universities downwards and there is neither sense nor justification in adhering to a set of entry requirements which were framed for other days and other conditions.

Finance

I now turn to a subject which in any context is distinctly depressing. I refer to our accounts, which reveal a gross surplus reduced to £3,000. This unwelcome news, though partly attributable to special charges during the year such as repairs, U.E.C. Congress and District Societies Conference, nevertheless indicates a trend which we are virtually powerless to stop, because it arises from external factors which we cannot control. Present indications suggest a continuance of this, headed by the increase in postal charges recently announced and the provisions of the Budget.

The largest single increase was one just over £7,000 in salaries and wages. Of this well over £4,000 was spent on much needed additional staff appointed during the year. In this connection it should be remembered that headquarters has been grievously understaffed for years and, indeed, still is understaffed at executive level, so that further increases in this direction are to be expected. Most of the remainder of the £7,000 was spent on salary increases to existing staff and a further contributing factor is our almost constant need to make use of people on hire from agencies. This is expensive, but inevitable because clerical staff is so transient. For instance, in the departments where clerical labour is most used, there has during the year been a staff turnover of 90 per cent. This means almost constant retraining and a complete absence of continuity.

In such a year as 1964, therefore, one can take a certain amount of satisfaction in noting that in some directions charges were actually reduced or at any rate not increased. The general conclusion is unavoidable, however, namely that there must soon be a very substantial increase in membership subscriptions if the Association's activities are to be maintained at their present level.

Research

The activities of the research and technical committees are set out in some detail in the Council's report and it is no part of my intention to repeat the information. Nevertheless I cannot allow the occasion to pass without acknowledging our indebtedness and our gratitude to those members who so unselfishly devote so much of their own time to assisting the Association in this way.

While not singling out the Taxation Committee for special praise, I cannot help referring to the two very powerful memoranda on corporation tax and the capital gains tax prepared for the Chancellor, because they were over and above the normal submissions prior to the budget and on the Finance Bill which are prepared each year. I would like to mention also our two booklets published during the year The Use of Computer Service Bureaux, being Part V of our E.D.P. series, and a revised edition of Sources of Capital.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

It is now some fifteen months since the new joint diploma in management accounting services was announced and I am sure that some of you are wondering what is happening about it. Having regard to the very great amount of ground to be covered the interval of silence has not really been so very long.

First of all, the scheme had to be adopted by all the participating bodies and such changes made in their consitutions as would enable each of them to take part. We achieved this at the last annual general meeting, but three of the other bodies were involved in amendments to their charters, which is never a speedy process. One of them, indeed, the Irish Institute, has encountered technical legal difficulties of some complexity, because it operates not only in Northern Ireland but also in the Republic.

For this reason it cannot at present participate at all and that is why we are proceeding for the time being on a four body basis.

Apart from that, however, accommodation has to be secured, staff appointed and forms and systems devised and the existing joint committee has been extremely busy on this. It is anticipated that the first examination will take place in 1966, but announcements will be made as soon as possible in the journals of the participating bodies.

The Budget

Perhaps the best part of the recent Budget was the Chancellor's Budget Speech, which was certainly a masterly exposition. As to the content of the Budget itself one may say that while previous Budgets could often be described as the mixture as before the present Budget can probably best be summed up as a rather more sickening mixture of ingredients both old and new. The increases in taxation announced in November 1964 cannot fail to place an additional burden upon industry – indeed to some extent this is already apparent – and at the same time must act as a further disincentive to personal effort. While increases of this nature are always introduced under the guise of deflationary operations they cannot fail to increase cost and thereby cause pressure for increased remuneration which the individual finds necessary to meet the higher prices which result. Experience of such measures over a good many years has certainly not produced much worth-while evidence that they are successful in containing inflation.

Added to this we now have what can only be described as an attack on overseas investment. That this is short sighted would seem to be so self-evident that it is surprising that it should require to be said. Nevertheless one exceedingly important company has now somewhat belatedly publicized the fact that every £ which it invests abroad produces within ten years £3 worth of extra British exports by way of machinery and raw materials. Moreover, it must often be the case that without such investment there would be no exports at all. For a dynamic economy based on a buoyant export trade such measures can only be described as extraordinary.

The long heralded corporation tax in the form in which the Chancellor has apparently seen fit to introduce it cannot fail to add further enormous complexity to our already over-complicated taxation system. Nor is it likely to have any very beneficial effects upon our industrial performance. The rate is still not public knowledge and has apparently not yet been decided but the present suggestion of a rate of 40 per cent is clearly designed to encourage retention of profits by companies and this too seems hardly calculated to produce a dynamic economy.

The proposals to tax capital gains at a rate of 30 per cent are again likely to add enormously to legislative complexities for the sake of advantages which seem highly problematical. The rate moreover is considerably higher than that which obtains in other important industrial countries and it seems likely to lead to considerable distortion in both the property and investment fields.

The Association in its recommendations concerning the capital gains tax proposals found it necessary to comment that the tax as outlined was unlikely ever to achieve public acceptance and that in these circumstances it was likely to lead to widespread evasion. This seems no less true today than when the comment was first made and the results can hardly fail to be unfortunate in their effect upon the attitude of the general public to taxation affairs in general.

I must say a word also concerning the proposals about entertaining expenses. That there has been some abuse cannot be denied though in truth this has not been nearly as flagrant as the publicity which it has received has sometimes suggested. Reasonable entertaining expenses are surely as much a proper business expense as any other business expense, and the fact of abuse in some quarters is really no good reason for the sweeping disallowance which is now proposed. A measure of this nature penalizes legitimate business in order to deal with the wrong-doings of a very few. Business entertaining, which – as I have indicated – has never in truth been universally abused, must of necessity continue and the Budget proposals will merely cause a further increase in business costs, some of which, at least, will inevitably be passed to the consumer.

Perhaps the most unfortunate feature of all in the Budget is that, despite certain gestures, no adequate effort has been made to bring Government expenditure within reasonable bounds. This excessive expenditure is probably the most important single factor in causing the continuing inflation and the recurrent balance of payment problems which have plagued this country since the end of the Second World War. Were this problem to receive the attention which it merits we should have travelled a very long way along the road to the healthy £.

Acknowledgements

There is no doubt that the office of President becomes more onerous each year, involving long and repeated absences from one's home and work. On the other hand, it is so stimulating an experience that I would be less than honest if I did not tell you that I have enjoyed every moment of it.

But to be able to enjoy it one must be certain of two things. One is the support and encouragement of one's colleagues on the Council; the other, an implicit reliance on the understanding and goodwill of one's partners or business associates.

In both respects I have been singularly fortunate and although I have already expressed this to them in a personal way I want to say publicly how much I appreciate the honour of being elected to the office of President and also the help I have at all times so readily received from my Vice-President and from all my other fellow-councillors. At the same time I would like my partner and staff to know how deeply I value their forebearance, support and patience during a very busy year in which I have spent much more time out of my office than in it.

It has been a great delight to my wife and to me to have been able to meet so many members and students of the Association and we have everywhere received a most sincere and charming welcome. May I take this opportunity of thanking them for making us feel so much at home so quickly and for looking after us so well.

I am sure I am speaking for all my predecessors when I say quite simply that no one except those who have occupied this office, can adequately pay tribute to our Secretary – Mr Cameron Osbourn. His wealth of experience and his untiring efforts on behalf of the Association make the task of every President far less arduous, and certainly much more enjoyable. Our Assistant Secretaries are ever willing to give any assistance or help wherever possible, and without such co-operation always so readily given, the burdens of the Presidency would increase. To the remainder of the permanent staff may I say thank you for all you have done during the past year. Still housed inadequately and still below their complement, they nevertheless manage to achieve results for which I am deeply grateful.

The report of the Council and the accounts of the Association for the year 1964 were then adopted.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

At a meeting of the Council which followed the annual general meeting, Mr G. L. Barker, F.A.C.C.A., was elected President and Mr W. S. Olleson, T.D., F.A.C.C.A., was elected Vice-President (as announced in Weekly Notes on another page).

AMONG the range of new spirit duplicators from Block & Anderson Ltd, is the Banda Model 1700 HAF brief-size machine suited to the duplication of company profit and loss accounts.

The maximum image area is 17 in. by 30 in. while forms as small as 1 in. by 3 in. can be printed if desired. Spirit for duplicating is contained in a gallon can housed in a cabinet upon which the machine is mounted. The Model 1700 HAF is a hand operated machine but an electrically operated brief-size machine is also available.

Five-year Contract for Intercom

A NEW push-button internal telephone system – Nufon – is available for as little as £19 a quarter for a twelve-station unit over a five-year period.

There are three Nufon units: T.13, TL.5 and TL.4. The first is an intercom for up to twelve stations, and thus it is possible for six two-way conversations to be established at the same time. A light signal in addition to the normal buzz appears on the called instrument over the name or department calling. All conversations are private, it being impossible for a third party to interrupt or listen-in, but he can indicate that he would like to speak, and at such a time the engaged telephone receives a 'light' only signal. The engaged instrument can, if it wishes, (a) admit the third party, thereby making a three-way conversation possible, (b) introduce the third party and cut off the other telephone to which it has been speaking, (c) ignore the third party 'light' signal until the existing conversation is finished.

Though the maximum capacity of T.13 is twelve stations, fewer than twelve can be installed and the additional stations up to the maximum can be added when required.

Clayton P.A.Y.E. Tax Slide

THE inner slider of the Clayton P.A.Y.E. Tax Slide has been revised to take account of the increased standard rate of income tax and the new scale of P.A.Y.E. codes, each effective from April 6th, 1965.

The revised inner sliders are now available for dispatch at a price of £1 10s each (cash with order). Complete tax slides, with revised inner sliders, are also available at a price of £3 each.

A Useful Postal Chart

ACCURATE mailing scales and an up-to-date postal rate chart are essential to ensure that no more than the correct postage is paid. With the new higher postage rates coming into effect on May 17th, attention to these matters is even more important. A helpful postal rate chart-calendar and a booklet entitled How Guessing at Mail Weights can Raise Your Postage Costs, both produced by Pitney-Bowes, are available free to readers.

Pitney-Bowes Ltd, Harlow, Essex.

Automatic Separation

STILL unrivalled for low-cost copying of translucent originals is dyeline photocopying – the process used by Remington's latest machine, the Model 2000 Dyprinter. This new unit can process 700–800 quarto-size originals an hour, with pro rata speeds for others up to a maximum of 13 by 16 in. The cost of a quarto copy is less than 1*d*.

The 2000 Dyprinter has an automatic separation device; alternatively if double-sided copies are required an over-ride switch allows for manual separation. The machine has a 1,200w. lamp enabling copying to be done from a wide range of semi-opaque originals.

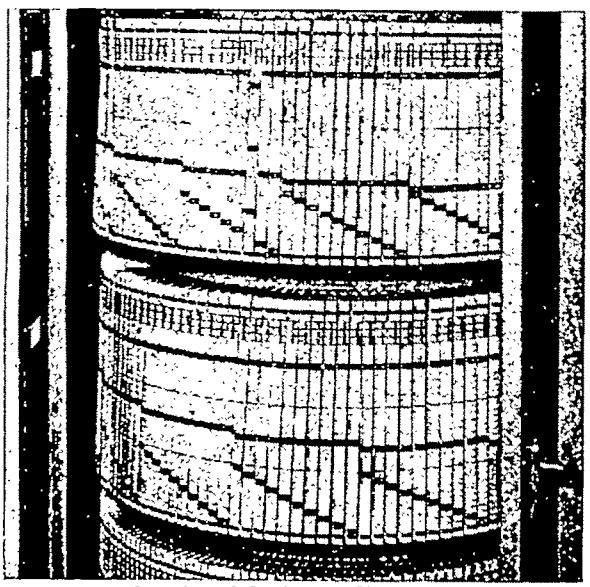
Price: £340.

Remington Rand Ltd, 65 Holborn Viaduct, London EC1.

For Spirit Masters

THE Bandaflex is a new machine that makes spirit masters quickly and inexpensively (4*d* a time) from almost any original. The original to be copied and a Banda Thermopack is passed through the Bandaflex and in four seconds a master is ready for placing on a spirit duplicator.

With the Bandaflex, spare masters for systems work can be made quickly, thereby obviating the need for further typings. Pages from accounts, forms, visual aids, letters, tenders, contracts, etc. can be spirit duplicated in their original form, quickly and cheaply.



Price: £78.

Equipment

Space-Saving Filing

SCANEX is the name given to a system of filing documents which, it is claimed, shows 75 per cent saving of space over four-drawer filing systems and 50 per cent saving of space over lateral systems. Previously, the Scanex system has been available in this country but only for Continental sizes. Now, the equipment is produced to meet British quarto and foolscap paper sizes.

A section of the Scanex filing system

Allied to the space-saving properties of Scanex is a method of indexing which provides for speedy location of a particular file, clear indication of when a file is missing and the point at which a specific file should be reinserted.

The files are supported on discs mounted on a pole support which runs up the centre of a steel cabinet with folding doors. Even when fully loaded, the discs are easy to revolve by hand and it is claimed that any one of 1,000 files can be found in about five seconds.

Scanex Ltd, ADM House, Northfield Avenue, London W5.

For Crisper Dyeline Copies

DIAZOBOND is the name given by the Federation of Engineers' Sensitized Material Manufacturers to a new specification of paper suitable for diazo (dyeline) copying. This paper looks and handles much like ordinary bond paper yet it has a high actinic translucency so that inexpensive diazo copies can be made of most material printed or written on it.

By the use of Diazobond it would be possible to control much of the originals that originate in an office so that internal copying can be done by the inexpensive diazo process. Also, of course, by using Diazobond for company letterheadings, a service is rendered to recipients who wish to make copies of correspondence.

Telephone Call Amplification

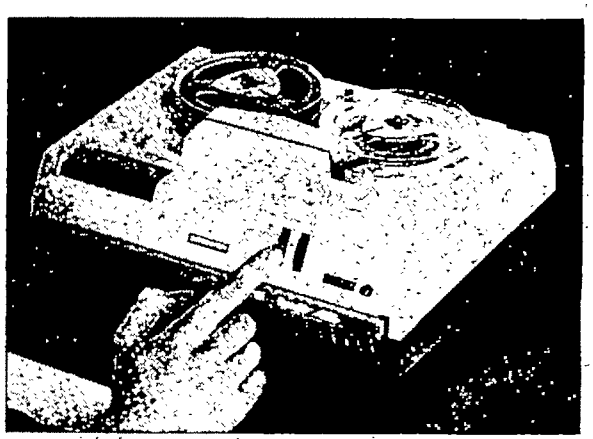
SPEAK-R-PHONE is the name given to a new telephone amplifier which is small enough to rest beside the telephone. To use, one simply places the telephone handset in the Speak-r-phone cradle; the device then turns on automatically and allows the user to talk into his phone without the need to hold his handset.

Price: £15 5s.

M. I. Sinclair & Co, 14A New Broadway, London W5.

For Eight Hours' Recording

THE new Graetz dictating machine (G.D.6), first seen at Hanover Fair last year, has arrived in Britain.



Improvements, apart from the more pleasing and modern appearance, include a retractable carrying handle and better microphone controls.

Another worth-while improvement is the incorporation of an automatic volume compensator without sacrificing the magic-eye feature, so that after recording a meeting of, say, ten or fifteen people, there is no longer any over-modulation or distortion if the user goes back to normal dictation without readjusting his magic eye. People recording telephone calls can use the track-changing device and a telephone call can be amplified at the same time as it is recorded.

Established Graetz features such as the three-figure indexing, the standard speed for transcribing from miniaturized machines and the recording capacity – as much as eight hours on one tape – are retained.

Price: £81 18s.

IRISH INSTITUTE'S COMPUTER APPRECIATION COURSE

MORE than forty chartered accountants from many parts of Ireland, including Dublin, Belfast, and Waterford, recently completed a successful residential computer appreciation course held at the Shamrock Lodge Hotel, Athlone, under the auspices of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland. The course covered all aspects of computer installation and operation, and addresses were given by lecturers prominent in the electronic data processing field.

The principal speaker was Mr T. W. McRae, C.A., a lecturer at the University of Hull, and a former P. D. Leake Research Fellow at the London School of Economics, and author of several papers on computer technology. The other speakers were Mr G. Bass, M.A., Methods Accountant, Esso Petroleum Co Ltd; Mr Michael Collins, B.E., E.D.P. Manager, Esso Petroleum Co (Ireland) Ltd; and Mr R. E. Mollard, A.C.A., Assistant Secretary, Gouldings Fertilisers Ltd.

Mr John Love, F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, in addressing the course, said this was the second of a number of specialized courses which the Institute intended to organize on behalf of members. A similar computer appreciation course had been held by the Institute last December, and this had proved extremely successful, and had resulted in a most favourable reaction among those who had taken part.

The computer was rapidly becoming an essential part of the over-all management operation, said the President, and it was important that the chartered accountant, whether he was employed in industry or in private practice, should have sufficient knowledge of computer techniques to be able to appreciate fully modern electronic data processing methods.

The President added that computers undoubtedly posed problems for the accountant, particularly in his role as auditor, but specialized courses would help members of the Institute by outlining the types of difficulties likely to be encountered, and would suggest methods of approach by which they could be solved.

BIRMINGHAM AND LIVERPOOL CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' WEEK-END CONFERENCE

THE Birmingham and Liverpool District Societies of Chartered Accountants held a joint week-end residential conference at Keele University from April 9th to 11th. The Stoke-on-Trent Branch of the Birmingham Society was responsible for the whole of the administrative arrangements.

In view of the rapidly increasing importance of the computer and its ability to assist in decision making, it was decided to arrange a 'management game' as the main theme of the conference. International Business Machines (U.K.) Ltd kindly undertook to organize this on behalf of the conference committee and throughout the week-end provided nine members of their staff as supervisors and a special installation at Keele University from whence the decisions of each 'company' were transmitted by land-line to the National Coal Board Computer Centre at Cannock. After processing, the results of these decisions were transmitted back to Keele. During the week-end, eight decisions were made and the relative success of each 'company' was discussed at a closing session.

The conference opened with an introductory talk by Mr B. A. Maynard, M.A., F.C.A., and the management game was introduced by Mr P. C. Harbidge, M.A. During the week-end, addresses were given by Mr A. Cleaver, M.A., on 'What is a computer'; Mr H. G. Mackenzie on 'The computer and sales accounting'; Mr N. C. Pollock, M.B.E., on 'The computer and management' and by Mr C. C. Taylor, J.P., F.C.A., on 'The computer and the auditor'.

At the guest night dinner the principal guests were Professor D. J. E. Ingram, M.A., Deputy Vice-Chancellor of the University; Mr J. H. Mann, M.B.E., M.A., F.C.A., a member of the Council of the Institute; Mr D. O. Thompson, F.C.A., Midlands Area Manager of I.B.M. (U.K.) Ltd; Mr W. M. S. Cairns, C.A., Financial Director of the West Midlands Division of the National Coal Board; Mr Dudley Hooper, M.A., F.C.A., Technical Officer of the Institute; and Mr W. M. Allen, B.A., Under-Secretary of the Institute. After the dinner an informal talk was given by Mr Dudley Hooper.

The conference aroused a great deal of interest and the necessity to limit the numbers to ninety meant that some eighty applicants were disappointed. The ninety members who attended represented a wide cross-section of members in practice and industry.

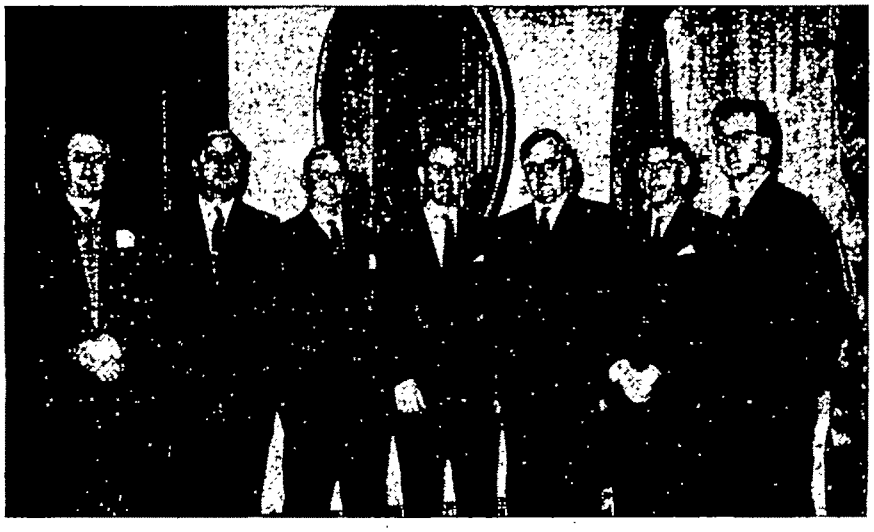
CERTIFIED ACCOUNTANTS' CONFERENCE



One hundred and fifty certified accountants attended a very successful one-day conference held by the London and District Society of Certified Accountants at the Connaught Rooms, London WC2, last Saturday.

The conference, on the theme 'New techniques for the management accountant', began with an opening address by the Association's President, Mr R. After a break for coffee the members reassembled to see a film on 'Critical path analysis', which was accompanied by an explanatory talk by Mr K. BEDS, BUCKS AND HERTS CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

As announced in The Accountant of April 10th, the Beds, Bucks and Herts Branch of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants is to hold, at Harpenden, on May 25th, a one-day conference on electronic data processing. The conference has been devised as a preliminary appreciation of electronic data processing in order to introduce members with little or no previous experience of the subject to the principles upon which a computer works and the methods underlying a system of electronic data processing.

It is felt that this introduction will not only be of benefit to members in industry but will also give assistance to those in practice in planning their audits where computers are in use. Mr D. W. Hooper, M.A., F.C.A., Technical Officer of the Institute, will direct the conference. The subjects to be considered will be 'The nature of a data processing system'; 'Some uses of electronic data processing'; 'Application and control'; and 'Auditing and the future'.

The fee for each member will be £2, which includes morning coffee, lunch and afternoon tea, and applications to attend have to be submitted by May 7th. Members wishing to join the branch, and thereby take advantage of the conference, should apply to the Honorary Secretary, Mr R. E. Wright, 11 George Street West, Luton, Beds.

ANOTHER NEW BOOK IN THE GEE'S WORLD MANAGEMENT SERIES

by C. S. DEVERELL, M.A., B.Sc.(Econ.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

Most of us concerned in business, industry, public administration or training would like to write and speak more effectively, whatever the level of our present attainment. We have to interview, write reports, attend conferences and discussion groups, speak at meetings, and get the most we can from suggestion schemes. We are equally aware that the complexities of business today call for skill and training, if shortcomings in communication are to be removed. This book will be of inestimable service to managerial and professional students, but it is more than a textbook. It is a practical guide, with all its examples drawn from business. It should also stimulate those engaged in industrial and commercial training. The author believes that one of the most obstinate difficulties we face is that of maintaining a high level of freshness, enthusiasm and creativity. How can we make certain that the right information reaches the right people in the right form at the right time? Has the exercise of the techniques of communication been given sufficient prominence in executive training programmes? This book is above all a review and an opportunity for personal stocktaking. All managers should find something in its pages which they can profitably read.

BUILDERS' COST CONTROL BONUSING AND ACCOUNTS

by

F. BRANDWOOD, A.C.W.A., A.M.B.I.M.

Written by an Accountant who has had many years' experience in the Building and Civil Engineering Industry, the book is designed to bring modern techniques in accountancy and costing to the industry.

It is divided into three main sections:

(1) The financial accounting aspect.

(2) Cost control incorporating standard costing principles, and describing a system giving management financial and productivity control over the whole of its contracts.

(3) The practical application of bonusing including the individual, gang and comprehensive systems.

The book will, by reason of its range, appeal to management in firms of all sizes, and should be of considerable use to Lecturers and Students in the Building Finance and Administration Courses, particularly as it is supported by a large selection of typical examination questions.

THE NATIONAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY

PERIOD OF RAPID GROWTH

MR KENNETH MOORE'S STATEMENT

The Report and Accounts of the National Mutual Life Assurance Society for 1964 and the actuaries' valuation report for the biennial period 1963 and 1964 have been issued to the Society's members. A review by the chairman, Mr Kenneth A. E. Moore, F.C.A., is contained in the Report. In his statement Mr Moore refers to the new business organization, which has been enlarged and modernized to provide facilities attuned to present-day needs for policyholders both old and new. That the service provided by the Society is appreciated is evidenced by the remarkable increase in new business.

For example, the corresponding figures were:

New sums assured ..	£3,468,782	£16,752,745
Annuity considerations	£33,568	£3,313,894
Yearly premium income	£1,573,672	£2,463,994

Over the same period the total assurance funds have grown from £16,341,377 to £29,576,067; reserve funds from £2,326,198 to £4,326,437 and the net rate of interest has risen from £4 17*s* 4% to £5 18*s* 8%.

Mr Moore comments on the budget recently presented to Parliament, which raises many problems for life offices. A great deal of uncertainty exists on the possible effect of the Chancellor's proposals on future bonus-earning power and these uncertainties must continue until the Finance Bill is published and finalized by subsequent proceedings in Parliament. In the meantime it is not known whether life offices will continue to be assessed on the established special basis of income tax not exceeding 7*s* 6*d* in the £ on their investment income less expenses or whether they are to be subject to Corporation Tax. It would appear, however, that the life offices are to lose the greater part of the benefit of double-taxation relief and are to pay Capital Gains Tax on any realized capital profits, including those on the redemption of existing holdings of gilt-edged securities subscribed for below their redemption figure. That these should come within the orbit of Capital Gains Tax, retrospectively in effect, is, Mr Moore feels, indefensible.

It may be that only those who have the responsibility of looking after very large funds which belong to others can appreciate the deep concern and even anxiety which present uncertainties create. It is in this context and not from any political bias or resistance to change that these and other comments in the review are made.

The Society's Assets

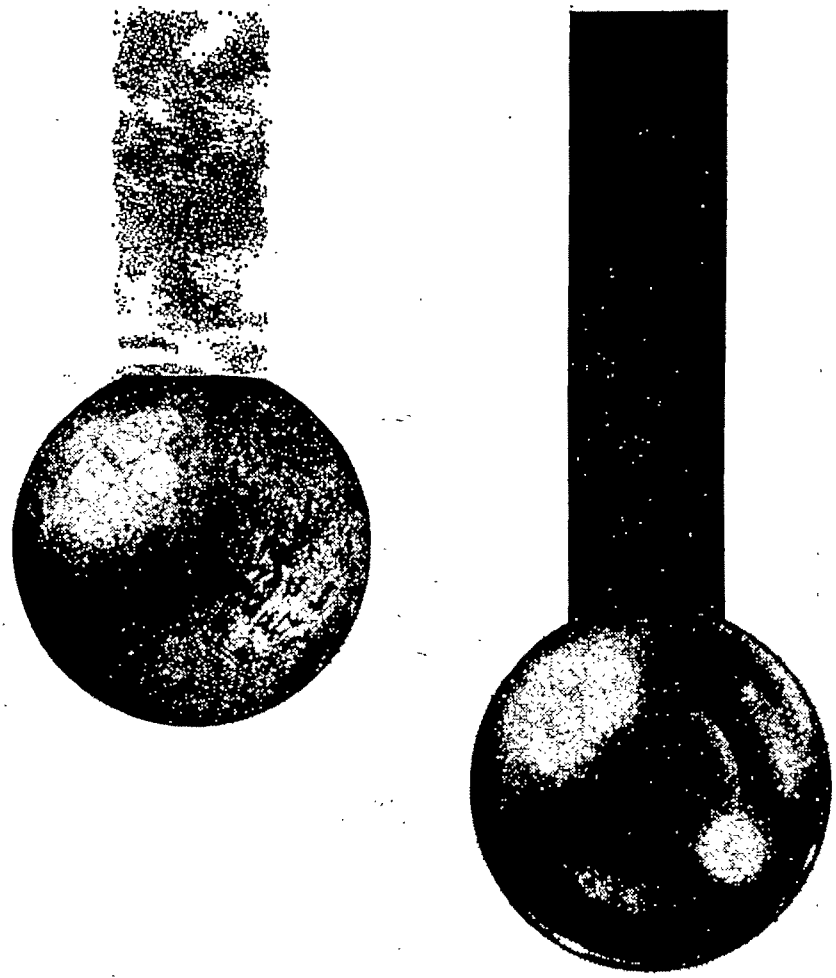
A summary in the Accounts shows that the Stock Exchange securities at market values on 31st December, 1964 amounted to nearly £24 million of which 48% was in equities including £4·6 million in dollar securities. A large part of the sums received for annuities have been invested in British Government securities and debentures which therefore both show substantial increases on the previous year. Mortgages and loans have also increased considerably.

The specific investment reserve, reduced by last year's depreciation to £2,326,437, is a useful safeguard against future market fluctuations. In addition there is a further £2 million at credit of the reserve fund which is, in effect, a general reserve built up largely from appreciation of Stock Exchange investments and Properties over the years.

There has been a welcome increase in the net yield on the Society's funds from £5 5*s* 3% in 1963 to £5 18*s* 8% but it seems highly probable that the budget proposals will reduce this yield in the future.

Valuation

As a result of the usual biennial valuation of the Society's liabilities it has been possible to declare for the years 1963 and 1964 the same high rates of compound bonuses and the same special bonus as were declared for the previous two years.



Prospects

One thing remains certain and that is that more than ever in current and prospective economic and fiscal conditions life assurance, in its various forms, will continue to be one of the most sensible and attractive ways of investing savings to safeguard the future and to accumulate capital.

Policyholders can rest assured that the Society's affairs are in good shape; its officials and staff in good heart, well-equipped to cope with changing conditions.

Annual General Meeting

The 135th annual general meeting will be held at the Society's head office 5 Bow Churchyard, London EC4, at 12 noon on Tuesday, 18th May.

Whither the I.M.T.A.?

IN several respects the sixty-page essay just released by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants is a curious document. Entitled Recruitment and Training for the I.M.T.A.[1] it is not, however, written by an I.M.T.A. committee but by Mr R. W. V. DICKERSON as a piece of 'independent research' commissioned by the I.M.T.A. Council. Mr DICKERSON is a Canadian chartered accountant and a barrister of British Columbia and his work was carried out 'in association with' the University of Lancaster.

The second unusual feature is that although a Steering Committee was appointed, under the chairmanship of the Vice-Chancellor of that University, 'the Steering Committee was careful to leave Mr DICKERSON complete freedom of expression, and its members, as individuals, are not committed to agreement with his proposals. But the Steering Committee gladly and unanimously puts forward Mr DICKERSON's report as a most able and worthwhile contribution to the discussion of the needs of the profession'.

Curious, also, is the absence of any evidence on which the report is based. This follows inevitably from Mr DICKERSON's method of working:

> 'I travelled extensively throughout the country and interviewed a great many members of the I.M.T.A. and others who had indicated their interest in the study. In addition to eliciting factual information, I found it useful to seek opinions on what I thought to be the main problems facing the I.M.T.A. and on how these problems might be solved. These interviews were semi-structured, directing the conversation into certain general areas and then allowing the respondents full freedom to go into whatever aspects of them they desired. This characteristic, coupled with the practice of building upon earlier interviews when framing questions for later ones, rendered the interview results unsuitable for statistical treatment.'

It is not therefore surprising that Mr DICKERSON has put on record that the conclusions expressed in the report 'do not in any sense represent a concensus of the views of the membership of the I.M.T.A.', that the issues discussed in the report are those which he thinks are important and that the responsibility for the recommendations proposed is his alone.

In so far as they are based on fallacious assumptions, the DICKERSON proposals must be regarded as suspect. For example, he refers to the chartered and other bodies as being 'concerned almost exclusively with the private sector of the economy'. Did no one, for instance, tell Mr DICKERSON that since the war a major activity of the Accountants Joint Parliamentary Committee has been to preserve for professionally qualified accountants their long-established work in the 'public sector'? Did no one show him the reports of the auditors of nationalized industries?

None of this constitutes a background against which the I.M.T.A. could take any positive action but as a brief sketch of a big problem the DICKERSON essay has probably given the I.M.T.A. Council a starting-point from which to examine the problem in depth.

The I.M.T.A., with only some four thousand members is, of course, the 'little sister' among the accountancy bodies and this is to be expected in an organization which exists to cater for so limited a part of the field embraced by the accountancy profession. Yet even within this narrow area, Mr DICKERSON finds it necessary to propose, as his main fundamental recommendation, the division of the I.M.T.A. into two streams in order to give practical recognition to the existence in local government of, on the one hand, the relatively few 'financial administrators' and, on the other hand, the relatively numerous lower grade 'accountants'.

Having decided upon schism, Mr DICKERSON proposes for its achievement:

(a) that the I.M.T.A. should raise the minimum educational requirements for entry to the financial administrator stream to at least two 'A' levels;

(b) that the education and training of recruits to the financial administrator category should be entrusted largely to the universities and colleges, with detailed arrangements to be worked out jointly between the interested universities and colleges and the I.M.T.A.;

(c) that the training of recruits to the accountant category should be organized, as far as possible, on block-release lines, supplemented where necessary by a uniform and compulsory correspondence day-release programme;

(d) that public authorities need to accept the implications of the foregoing proposals which will involve, among other things, the responsibility and cost of supernumerary training posts, training leave, adequate practical experience, and the need to allow senior staff, as members of the I.M.T.A., to devote time to training matters.

This last point throws into relief a basic problem confronting the I.M.T.A. and recognized by Mr DICKERSON. The I.M.T.A. candidate is first a local government employee and only second a student –

> 'The recruit will in most cases learn of the existence of the I.M.T.A. only after he has become a local government employee, and he may not begin his studies for several years, after he has discovered how limited his prospects are likely to be without the I.M.T.A.'s professional qualification.'

This is the heart of the matter, and where lies the solution? The I.M.T.A. Council announces that it has 'inaugurated a widespread and channelled debate on the proposals' and, curiously, that it > 'has already decided that examination candidates entering local government on and after January 1st, 1966, will be required to have passed a minimum of two subjects at G.C.E. advanced level.'

Curiously because the relevance of this step, prior to a decision on the principle of schism, is not apparent.

Mr DICKERSON's proposed 'financial administrator' category really corresponds with the chartered accountant, that is to say, the accountant who started off with the purpose of becoming a professional accountant and underwent the prescribed training for that purpose, gaining his experience in the professional office with its broad range of clients and conditions. The problem for local authorities (and it is really their problem, not that of the I.M.T.A.) is whether to fulfil their future needs by seeking to attract the professionally qualified accountant with the breadth of experience behind him, or to support proposals for a method of training – largely at the ratepayers' expense – a new breed of 'financial administrator' as well as something like the present I.M.T.A. qualification as a junior grade.

In approaching its problems the I.M.T.A. has a difficulty that is peculiar to itself among the accountancy bodies. Unlike the other bodies it is not fully independent. It is inconceivable that the I.M.T.A., consisting as it does mainly of financial staff of local authorities, could adopt a policy contrary to that of its members' employers or their ultimate governors, the Ministry of Housing and Local Government. This situation could make the DICKERSON essay either a document of no importance except as an academic exercise, or a document of major importance far beyond the confines of the I.M.T.A.

CORPORATION TAX

Accounting Periods

SO much of the new Finance Bill will profoundly affect the work of the accountancy profession that it is difficult to say which of the many complex provisions will trouble the profession the most. However, since the new corporation tax will be levied not only on company trading profits, but also on many other kinds of company income, and since the liability to this tax will be closely bound up with the question of making up accounts, it is perhaps apposite to deal first with this aspect.

The artificial basis periods for Schedule D income tax, with the vagaries of the commencing and cessation provisions, have long been under attack. However, a scheme for putting companies on to a current-year basis for income tax was worked out and was published as a White Paper in April 1964. Students of this will see that it has been used as a basis for the transition to corporation tax purposes.

Although the financial year (ending March 31st) is retained, the unit of assessment period is not the financial year but 'the accounting period'. It is for the accounting period that corporation tax is to be assessed on a 'company' which is defined in Part IV of the Bill to mean (except where the context otherwise requires):

> '(a) subject to clauses 62 and 63 of this Act, any body corporate or unincorporated association, but does not include a partnership'.

Clause 45 (1) of the Bill provides that, subject to exceptions, a company is to be chargeable to corporation tax on all its profits wherever arising. Corporation tax for any financial year is to be charged on profits arising in that year (clause 45 (3)). This subclause goes on to declare that assessments to corporation tax are to be made on a company by reference to accounting periods. The amount of profits chargeable, after making all proper deductions, arising in an accounting period must, where necessary, be apportioned between the financial years in which the period falls.

Before examining what an accounting period is, it is convenient first to go into the question of when corporation tax starts. Clause 45 (5) prohibits the making of a corporation tax assessment for either of the two financial years ending March 31st, 1966, before the passing of an Act which fixes the rate of tax for the financial year. This embargo is removed after March 31st, 1966, when assessments can continue to be made on the basis of the rate of tax for the previous year, subject, of course, to adjustment afterwards. It is contemplated that the tax rate for each new financial rate will be fixed in the Finance Act which is expected to receive the Royal Assent by August 5th in the year.

Clause 42 imposes corporation tax for the two financial years ending March 31st, 1966, 'at such rate as Parliament may hereafter determine': presumably one rate for both years is contemplated. However, clause 75 (1) provides that a company not within the charge for income tax for the income tax year 1965–66 in respect of a source of income is not to come within the corporation tax charge before April 6th, 1966, in respect of that source. According to clause 83 (2) (j), a source of income is 'within the charge to' corporation tax or income tax if that tax is chargeable on the income arising from the source, or would be if there were any income. The expression 'source of income' is not defined, but there is a general provision that expressions used in the Income Tax Acts have the same meaning in the Finance Bill, if the context allows.

Clause 75 effects the somewhat awkward transition from income tax to corporation tax where a company is not assessed on the current-year basis for 1965–66. If a company is within the charge to income tax for the income tax year 1965–66 in respect of a source of income

> 'the company shall not come within the charge to corporation tax in respect of the source for any period before the end of that year, unless the charge to income tax for that year falls to be ascertained by reference to a period ending before the end of that year, but shall in that case be within the charge to corporation tax in respect of the source from the end of the basis period for income tax for that year or, if it is later, the end of the basis period for the year 1964–65'.

'Basis period' for 1964–65 and 1965–66 is defined in clause 75 (4) as the period on the income of which the income tax (if any) chargeable for that year falls to be finally computed. If some provision of the Income Tax Acts requires the income of some other period to be taken, then that other period is to be taken for section 75 (4) purposes as the basis period.

We are now in a position to examine the meaning of 'accounting period'. The phrase as such is not defined, but there are provisions for determining when an accounting period begins and when that same period ends. As to the beginning of an accounting period, clause 47 (2) lays down two simple alternatives. The period begins whenever

(a) the company comes within the charge to corporation tax, whether
  (i) by the coming into force of any provision of Part IV of the Bill; or
  (ii) by the company becoming resident in the United Kingdom; or
  (iii) by the company acquiring a source of income; or
  (iv) 'otherwise', or
(b) an accounting period of the company ends without the company then ceasing to be within the charge to corporation tax.

As regards (a), the most common beginning will be at the end of the basis period for 1965–66, i.e. some date like December 31st, 1964, or March 31st, 1965. This follows from clause 75 (2) (4). For most beginnings we must look to the end of the immediately preceding accounting period. This brings us to clause 47 (3) which provides that an accounting period shall end on the first occurrence of any of the following events:

(a) the expiration of twelve months from the beginning of the accounting period;
(b) (i) an accounting date of the company; or
  (ii) if there is a period for which the company does not make up accounts, the end of that period;
(c) (i) the company beginning or ceasing to carry on 'any' [sic] trade; or
  (ii) beginning or ceasing to be within the charge to corporation tax in respect of a trade;
(d) the company beginning or ceasing to be resident in the United Kingdom;
(e) the company ceasing to be within the charge to corporation tax.

One of the intriguing questions about this definition is how long one is supposed to wait to find out whether a company 'does not make up accounts' for a particular period. 'Accounting date' of a company is defined by clause 83 (2) (a) as > 'the date to which a company makes up its accounts'.

This apparently refers to an actual making up, not a date which is normally the date to which accounts are made up but have not yet been so made up. If a company carrying on more than one trade makes up accounts for any of them to different dates, and does not make up general accounts for the whole of its activities, the Inland Revenue can choose one of the dates.

There is an overriding provision in clause 47 (6) that, where a company is wound up, an accounting period shall end and a new one begin, and thereafter the only accounting periods shall be periods of twelve months starting on the anniversary of the winding up, until the end of the winding up. For this purpose, winding up commences on the passing by the company of the winding-up resolution. If a winding-up petition is presented, and a winding-up order made on that petition before any resolution for winding up, then the winding up is deemed to commence on the presentation of the petition. The same applies mutatis mutandis where the winding up is not under the Companies Act.

Not surprisingly, clause 47 (7) deals with the situation where the beginning or end of any accounting period is uncertain. The inspector can make an assessment for such period (not exceeding twelve months) as seems to him appropriate. This remains the accounting period unless

(a) on further facts coming to his knowledge the inspector sees fit to revise it; or (b) on an appeal the company shows the true accounting period.

If the company shows the true accounting periods which are different from the ones estimated by the inspector, the existing assessments are to have effect for the periods to which they relate as assessments for the true accounting periods. Other necessary assessments can be made as might have been made at the time of making of the assessments appealed against. In other words, in relation to time limits, the company is to have no advantage from any uncertainty about its accounting date.

Cost, Output and the Accountancy Student

by M. J. MEPHAM, B.Sc.(Econ.), F.C.A., A.C.W.A.
Senior Lecturer in Accountancy, Slough College.

THE study of economics has now been accepted in the English Institute's examination syllabus as a necessary feature in an accountant's education. This is a broadening of the educational base with which few will quarrel but there are, in economics, difficulties for accountancy students which perhaps are not encountered by other students. The overlapping terminology of economics and accountancy is one obvious source of difficulty. Other difficulties are latent in the conventional 'theory of the firm'.

The accountancy student warily picking his way through the 'theory of the firm' in an economic text, is frequently disturbed at the gulf which exists between this theoretical exposition of business activity and the real life business situations which he daily observes or in which he finds himself involved. An economist would point out that the theory is not 'descriptive' but 'prescriptive', i.e. it is designed to give guidance to a hypothetical entrepreneur as to what he should do, rather than to describe what business executives actually do. The theory does, nevertheless, involve constructing a model and it is difficult to maintain this distinction – indeed, one wonders whether it is valid since to prescribe optimizing techniques (as the economist does) on the basis of a defective model, is surely a questionable procedure. This is especially so if these techniques are taken over into 'managerial economics', a developing field which purports to advise, not a hypothetical, but the real business man.

Many economists are aware of this unsatisfactory situation. In his 'Approaches to the Study of Decision-making relevant to the Firm' (The Journal of Business, April 1961), Martin Shubik has written:

> 'Microeconomics has been, and to some extent remains, a jungle of special assumptions, special cases, unsatisfactory measurements and tenuous theorizing.'

Attempts to improve the model are currently being made; a notable recent example being A Behavioural Theory of the Firm, by Cyert and March (Prentice Hall, 1963).

The Cost/Output Relationship

At certain points in the theory, economists derive from the model conclusions which seem to contradict what the accountancy student will have learned elsewhere in his studies. One such point is the cost/output relationship. Cost varies with output and the accountant considers that he knows how it varies.

Many accountants in industry spend much time and energy in measuring cost in successive financial periods and in preparing budgets for various levels of production. Many will have had to explain to management variations in unit cost figures resulting from output changes. Those who have read the amusing book, How to Run a Basoon Factory, by Mark Spade, will remember the following passage:

> 'Don't be surprised if your costing department tells you one day that a thing cost £20 and the next that it costs 4*s* 3*d*. Costing departments always do that, and they will certainly be able to produce figures which prove absolutely conclusively that they were right on both occasions.'

From their accumulated experience accountants have developed a theory[1], which seems to disagree with that used by economists in the theory of the firm. The two competing theories can best be studied by looking at the six accompanying graphs, three showing the cost behaviour assumed by the accountant, and three the economist's view of the position. The economist makes a distinction between the short-run and the long-run period[2] and to simplify matters the short-run only will be considered here. A short-run period is one in which the organization is assumed to be unable to alter its fixed plant and buildings. To expand its output the firm will thus use its existing equipment more intensively.

Although accountants do not use this terminology it is easy to assume that the graphs have been prepared for a budget period in which no

[1] Perhaps it would be more correct to say that certain accounting procedures presuppose an underlying theory – accountants would be loath to formulate a cost/output theory as such.

[2] P. J. D. Wiles uses instead the terms 'partial adaptation' and 'total adaptation'.

capital expenditure is envisaged. A further simplification is the assumption that a single type of product is being produced. Apart from these two assumptions there are others made unilaterally by both accountants and economists; these are built into their respective graphs and it is difficult to generalize them without destroying the distinctive approaches of the two disciplines. These further points will be considered later as factors which contribute to the differing conclusions reached.

These six graphs are typical of those that the student finds in his textbooks. Most books would acknowledge that the charts are greatly simplified and few writers would deny that there are special cases which do not fit into the theories, but the graphs do purport to show the general position.

Total Cost Curves

The first pair of graphs, A1 and A2, illustrate competing views of the reaction of total cost to output changes. The differences might appear to be of minor importance but they have significant implications when unit costs are derived from them. Both graphs necessitate a distinction between fixed and variable costs. The student will already be familiar with this. Fixed costs are costs which tend to remain constant in total, irrespective of the level of production; they are the costs involved in providing and maintaining the firm's production potential, its organization and equipment.

The usual example of a fixed cost is factory rent, this will have to be paid at the agreed rate whatever output level is attained. Variable costs are those which tend to vary with the level of production such as the cost of content material, direct labour and certain types of supplies and services.

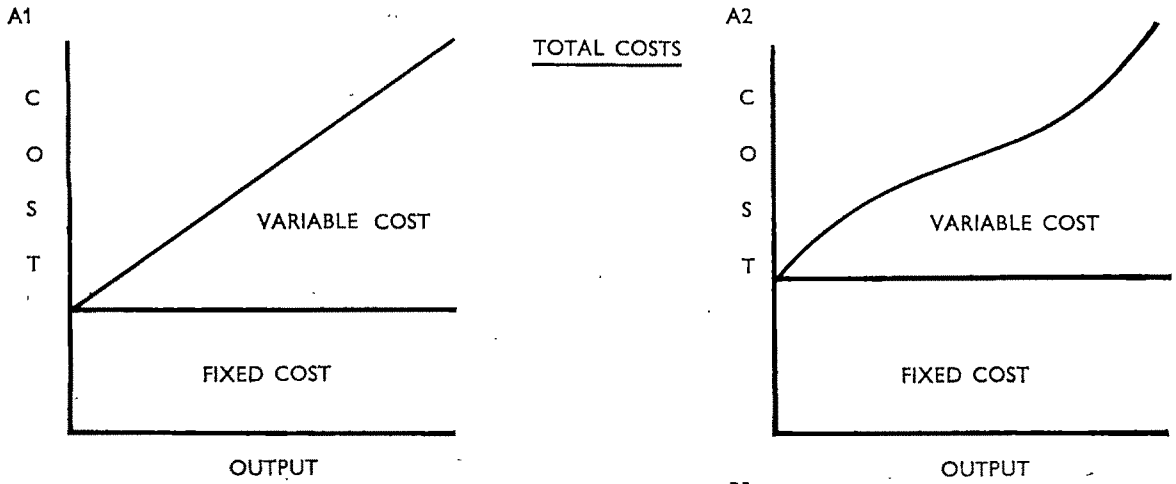
Graph A1 is usually shown with the addition of a sales curve to indicate the firm's break-even point – it is then called a 'break-even chart'. Accountants would recognize that the relationship between total cost and output is not linear but they would claim that this is a useful approximation not too remote from the truth. Numerous empirical studies seem to support this contention but it is important to remember that usually the chart will be constructed from data derived from past experience over a limited range of production. The curve derived from this information will be extended down to nil output and up to full capacity. The curve is therefore more certainly substantiated over the range which corresponds to normal activity.

Graph A2. – The fixed costs in the economist's graph are shown at a higher level than those in A1, because of the inclusion of items that the accountant generally excludes from the category of cost, e.g. normal profit, entrepreneurial salary, etc. The effect of these additional items may, however, be offset by differences in the treatment of depreciation. The accountant often treats this as a fixed cost (vide the English Institute's Recommendations) but the economist would segregate user cost and deal with this as a variable element of depreciation.

The curve itself is assumed to take the form of an inverted ogive. The reasoning substantiating this is as follows: with a given plant, production at low levels of output will be inefficient and variable costs will therefore increase quite rapidly (though at a decreasing rate); after a certain point the plant will be operating in the range for which it was designed and the curve will be much less steep. Eventually it will rise again at an increasing rate as the plant is overworked and the 'law of diminishing returns' comes into play. This 'law of diminishing returns' states that if the firm's output rate is increased beyond a certain level, the additional units of output will cost progressively more and more. Each additional input of a variable factor of production (e.g. an additional labourer hired) will have a lower productivity. This is partly because the firm's capital equipment is diluted (i.e. the labourer will have less mechanical power at his elbow), and partly because the firm's administrative staff will (after a certain point) experience managerial problems, e.g. difficulties in co-ordinating the work. As additional variable factors of production are added the productivity of the existing factors is also likely to diminish.

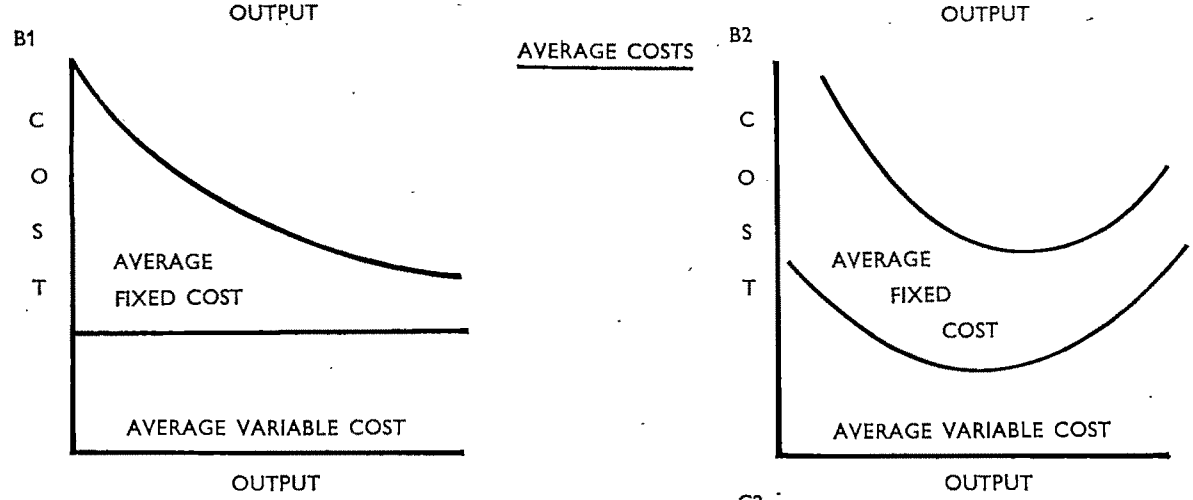
The law is essentially based on common-sense considerations but the reasoning lacks corroboration from econometric studies.

Average Cost Curves



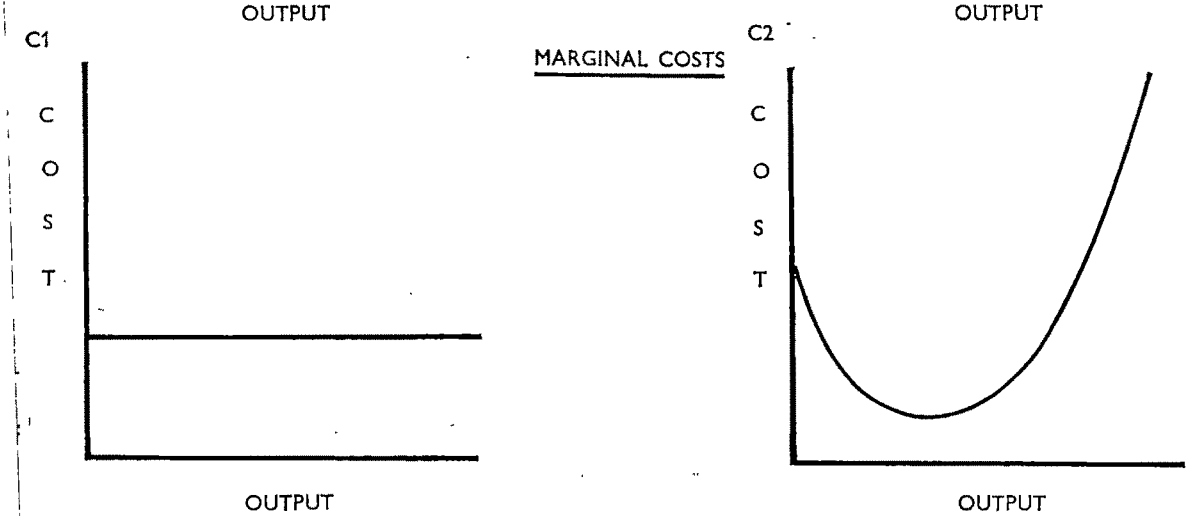
From the total cost curves can be derived average unit cost curves. The distinction between fixed and variable costs is also important here but it will be obvious that the change in viewpoint, from total figures to average figures, results in a metamorphosis in the character of fixed costs. Costs which remain fixed in total, vary when expressed as an amount per unit of production at varying levels of output. Whether or not variable costs undergo a similar transformation into costs which are fixed per output unit is the

THE BEHAVIOUR OF COST AT VARYING LEVELS OF OUTPUT



ACCOUNTING THEORY

ECONOMIC THEORY



TOTAL COSTS

AVERAGE COSTS

MARGINAL COSTS

main point at dispute in the two theories that are under discussion.

Graph B1. – Average cost is depicted here as falling as output increases. Fixed costs are spread over a greater number of units of output and thus decline per unit of output whilst variable costs per unit are assumed to remain constant. This theory is built into the structure of costing procedures. Thus the preparation of budgets (and in particular flexible budgets) will be based on this model. Break-even analysis, variance analysis and the calculation of predetermined overhead rates also utilize the theory.

Graph B2. – The average cost curve is considered by economic theory to be U-shaped. Average fixed cost per unit falls as output increases; average variable cost also falls but after a certain point the 'law of diminishing returns' begins to operate, the rate of fall slows down and eventually the curve turns upwards. With some factors of production fixed (as plant is assumed to be in the short-run) the theory is that average costs will rise as production is pushed beyond the plant's most efficient level of output.

Marginal Cost Curves

From the above discussion it can be seen that the major point at issue is the behaviour of the variable cost element as output changes. Does variable cost increase in proportion to output increases or does it, at high output levels, increase at a greater rate? The last pair of charts segregate this aspect by comparing the marginal cost curves of accounting and economic theory.

> 'Marginal cost is the amount at any given volume of output by which aggregate costs are changed if the volume of output is increased or decreased by one unit.' (A Report on Marginal Costing. The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, 1961.)

Graph C1. – The accountant's marginal cost curve coincides with his average variable cost curve. The additional cost of producing an extra unit of output is the additional variable cost incurred and the accountant assumes that this remains constant per unit of output. This is likely to confuse the student since it is easy to assume that marginal cost and average variable cost are the same thing. Here they are the same quantitatively but the concepts are clearly not the same and should be distinguished.[1]

Graph C2. – The economist's marginal cost curve is U-shaped but it does not coincide with the U-shaped average variable cost curve – the lower curve in B2. The process of averaging in B2 produces a shallower curve, whereas the marginal curve in C2 is usually assumed to be markedly U-shaped. The marginal cost curve cuts the average variable cost curve at the latter's lowest point. Marginal cost is assumed to exceed average unit cost at high levels of production – accounting textbooks, by equating marginal cost and average variable cost, rule out this possibility.

Differing Viewpoints

The two viewpoints have been outlined and the differences between them are evident. Can they be reconciled – or must the student be reconciled to learning two sets of mutually conflicting theories? He may even fail consciously to realize that there is a contradiction present, as so often accountancy and economics are dispensed in separate packages as if there were no relationship between them. Several general points need to be considered before an attempt to effect the needed reconciliation is made.

The first point is the complex nature of business activity. This is too obvious to need stressing. There will inevitably be simplification and distortion in any manageable model of a representative firm. The importance of achieving a balance between the conflicting aims of accuracy of representation and the avoidance of unnecessary complication is apparent.

Secondly, there is the economic theory of a hypothetical firm's activities. This is built up from certain postulates using rigorous argument. Logically it is impeccable but it may not closely enough resemble reality because of unrealistic assumptions built into its foundations. This is particularly likely since the theory seems to have been constructed for a purpose differing from that for which it is currently being used.

The third consideration is the accountant's attempt to describe and interpret quantitatively the conditions obtaining in a particular firm. It is tempting to draw a contrast between the economist looking at reality through his theories and the accountant looking at reality directly. The accountancy student might well murmur, as he alternates between his economics textbook and Bigg's Cost Accounts, 'For now we see through a glass darkly but then face to face'; but this would be unfair. The accountant, too, has glasses deals with such doubts in some detail and, apart from the user cost problem, he meets the objections satisfactorily. For a wide range of output the econometric studies appear to be valid, constant marginal cost appears to be the rule and the accountant seems to be largely vindicated.

[1] The earlier definition of marginal cost given by The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants in Terminology of Cost Accountancy did not help matters. Marginal cost was there defined as 'prime cost plus variable overhead'.

Conclusion

The suggested alterations to the graphs deal only with the effects of the gross assumptions made in the model of the business enterprise. The theory of the firm is currently the target of much criticism and many would agree that, unless the theory is to be restricted to giving advice to a fictitious business man in a make-believe environment, this model must be made more realistic. As Martin Shubik has observed:

> 'The simplifications made to obtain the competitive model of the firm are too drastic to provide either a normative or descriptive microeconomic theory of more than limited use to the firm.'

Until a new model is developed there is need for first-aid treatment if many accountancy students are not to succumb. Such books as Managerial Economics, by Joel Dean (Prentice Hall, 1961), can act as an antidote, but the real need is for some degree of integration in the teaching of the two disciplines which would prevent inconsistencies arising. Such co-operation would help in developing a more rigorous theoretical background for accountancy and would assist in making the model of the firm more realistic. Kenneth Boulding in 'Economics and Accounting: The Uncongenial Twins', Studies in Accounting Theory (Sweet & Maxwell, 1962), says: 'The point where accounting and economics come closest together is in what the economists call the theory of the firm.' This may be true but it is not apparent in the textbooks at present.

Staffing Problems of the Small Firm

BY 1970 it is hoped that a university degree will be required for admission as a chartered accountant student-in-training. Mr C. F. Gaviller, F.C.A., in The Canadian Chartered Accountant (March) warns that only one very high standard will ensure survival of the profession, and that this will make necessary the degree requirement.

Discussing possible difficulties, he thinks the total supply of students will probably need to be less than in the past. Many firms at present employ students on work quite undemanding of the intellect, and uneconomical at the salary rates payable to university graduates. Book-keeping needs technicians, possibly under supervisors with an academic background of industrial accounting courses. Much detailed audit checking must be avoided, procedures being made much more interesting to students. Depth-auditing techniques will help the auditor, in the small business, to perform the public accountant's most satisfying function, that of business adviser.

Mr Gaviller says that statistics show a ratio of students to chartered accountants in Canada of over 1:1 in many small firms. He suggests that the Canadian Institute might prepare a guide to university recruiting for the small firms who will have to emulate the practice of the large firms. In 1970, he says, there are likely to be three times as many attending the universities as now. Also university graduate women are another potential source of students-in-training. The annual salary of a general arts graduate entering as a student-in-accounts is likely to be $4,000 to $4,800, as against about half that for matriculants. Mr Gaviller suggests that the hourly billing rate for a university graduate might be $5 to $6, compared with $3.75 to $4.50 for a matriculant. Fees to clients will have to be perhaps 15 per cent higher for better work by a better staff.

Continuing Education for the Profession

IN an address to The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Manitoba, Mr D. R. Lukin Johnston, F.C.A., President of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, reported in The Canadian Chartered Accountant (March), said that the body of knowledge to be mastered by the student is growing very rapidly. Portraying the computer as striking with whirlwind force, he spoke of the new language of data processing – input, output, storage, programming, test-decks. Modern techniques of auditing – analyses, checklists, internal control questionnaires, flow charts – have changed the face of professional work beyond recognition and relieved it of much of its boring drudgery. Continuing education is the solution, he said. The Canadian Institute has set up a fund for research grants and fellowships to help relieve the problem of the great dearth of teachers.

AUSTRALIA

Australian Society's Annual Report

THE annual report of the General Council of the Australian Society of Accountants for the year ended December 31st, 1964, presented at the ordinary general meeting of members in Sydney on Monday of this week, records a substantial increase of 1,293 members during the year, bringing the total to 26,388. Of these, 2,673 are Fellows, 21,574 Associates and 2,141 Provisional Associates.

In the course of the report the General Council refer to the modern trend towards wider share ownership and this, coupled with a number of company failures, had focused attention on financial reporting. The General Council add that some public criticism resulting from the company failures had been warranted in so far as the criticism pointed to the need for the clearer definition of accounting principles and also for a programme of public education concerning the respective roles of accounting and financial policy. A representative committee has been set up by the General Council to examine the accounting implications of recent investigations into the affairs of various companies and it is hoped that its findings will be of assistance to members in isolating unresolved problems and areas of accounting in need of further refinement.

On the subject of the introduction of decimal currency in Australia, the report emphasizes the need for members to keep themselves fully informed on the problems involved during the period of currency conversion and to assist members, lectures and seminars are being held in all the Society's divisions.

Referring to the Society's policy to seek statutory recognition of all sections of the profession on a basis which will enable it to control its own affairs, the report states that discussions with The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Australia and with the State Government continued in Victoria during the year, where a substantial measure of agreement was reached on basic principles.

The report combines for the first time the annual reports of the Society's Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Tasmanian and Western Australian divisions.

UNITED STATES

Economist's Predictions for Accounting

DR EZRA SOLOMON, Professor of Finance in the Graduate School of Business, Stanford University, foretells in the Journal of Accountancy, that the U.S. gross national product will be at least 80 per cent above the price level of 1963 by the year 1975. He thinks the demand for professional services such as accounting will grow even faster, with the spread of U.S. accounting techniques overseas, so that by 1975 the demand for accounting services should be more than doubled. As to changes in the type of such services, he thinks that the increasing use of such data as national income statistics and price level indices is bound to affect the accountant's knowledge.

Dr Solomon states that unless the accountant takes part directly in computer programming, he will find himself displaced even within his present function. As chief interpreter of financial data he will lose his position, if he has to depend on another group of interpreters in an increasingly computerized world, with vast areas and possibilities for decision-making. While the accountant has, traditionally, a strong position as originator of cost-related forecasts, the same cannot be said for the sales and revenue elements of the planning process, which require different techniques. Dr Solomon sees a steady shift in the direction of control instead of mere recording and reporting, and within control a shift from cost control to control over the entire set of volume-price-cost relationships.

Since management is becoming increasingly receptive to more 'scientific' measures of yield on investment, Dr Solomon foresees a need for the accountant to explore this field, more familiar to the engineer and the economist, and to go further into the area of financial analysis and decision-making. Management will require the imaginative interpretation and adjustment of accounting and financial information to evaluate managerial effectiveness. If the accountant does not accept the responsibility someone else will.

SOUTH AFRICA

The Budget 1965–66

IN his Budget speech to the South African Parliament, the Minister of Finance, Dr T. E. Donges, said that a surplus of R110 million on revenue account for the current financial year was expected. This surplus was equivalent to 10½ per cent of the total Budget estimates of last year and was attributable to the maintenance of a high growth rate in the economy and, more particularly, the rapid rise in profits, which caused Government revenues during the current year to exceed the original estimated by a wide margin. The whole of this surplus of R110 million, is to be transferred to Loan Account.

Total expenditure on Revenue Account for the year 1965–66 is estimated to amount to just under R1,157 million. Revenue on the existing basis of taxation, less various concessions mentioned below, is estimated to produce R1,139 million, leaving R17,800,000 to be found from other sources.

The concessions in respect of revenue on the existing basis of taxation are of minor effect on the overall picture. An increased contribution out of customs and excise duty to the National Road Fund will absorb a matter of R4 million. With immediate effect, all receipts for salaries, wages and pensions will be exempt from stamp duty; it is further proposed that, again with immediate effect, the minimum amount in respect of receipts subject to stamp duty be increased from R2 to R10; these two concessions will involve an estimated decrease in revenue amounting to R1,700,000.

The last of these concessions is in respect of income tax on the earnings of married women. Taxation will no longer be calculated on the aggregate income of husband and wife, but at the tax rate applicable to an amount equal to the greater of the two incomes plus half of the smaller. This concession will cost an estimated R1,900,000.

In future, provisional taxpayers under the recently-introduced P.A.Y.E. scheme will only be required to make two, instead of three, provisional tax payments each year. This concession will undoubtedly save accountants and other financial agents acting for provisional taxpayers some headaches during the year. Although no official pronouncement has yet been made, it is confidently expected that in future, provisional taxpayers will probably have to make payments in September and February each year, instead of in June, September and February as hitherto.

Other minor concessions include an extension to aircraft, with certain modifications, of the initial allowances and depreciation now applicable to ships and a decision that in future separated couples living in circumstances indicating the probability of permanent separation are to be taxed as separate taxable entities and no longer on the aggregate income of husband and wife. Finally, in order to encourage foreign companies operating in the Republic to establish subsidiaries in South Africa, lower stamp duty on leases in which two months', instead of one month's, notice is stipulated and the exemption from stamp duty of transfers of shares in South African companies effected outside the Republic.

The shortfall of R17,800,000 is to be made up in various ways. To compensate to a certain extent for the loss of revenue in respect of stamp duty on certain types of receipts as mentioned above, a slightly higher duty of 2 cents, instead of 1 cent as hitherto, will be levied on receipts of amounts of R25 or more, with effect from July 1st, 1965. In the main, however, the shortfall is to be made good by means of a 5 per cent surcharge on company tax.

The total amount required on Loan Account for the coming year is estimated at R655 million. The greater part of this amount will be raised in the usual way by means of loan recoveries, internal conversions, Public Debt Commission, new loans and the like. Another sizeable contribution will be the appropriation of last year's revenue surplus of R110 million.

The general feeling amongst business men is one of disappointment that, while the country's major need at the moment is for a definite stimulation of productivity, no steps were taken to alleviate the serious shortage of labour in South Africa and to stimulate the inflow of foreign capital.

The necessary adjustments, so far as computation of tax liability is concerned, are of a minor nature and should have little, if any, effect, on busy accountants.

New Accounting Journal

A NEW monthly journal of the Joint Council of the Societies of Chartered Accountants of South Africa, entitled The South African Chartered Accountant, was launched in the new year and the first three issues have maintained a high standard of reporting on matters affecting the profession in South Africa.

Although principally in English, sections of the journal are in Afrikaans, and the March issue contains the first instalment of a 'Language Forum' in which examples of accounting terminology are given in the two languages. Also in the March issue is a report, with pictures, of the recent Diamond Jubilee Summer School of the Transvaal Society. Regular features appearing each month include 'Notes and Comments', 'Reports from the Provinces' and an interesting personal column by the Secretary of the Joint Council under the heading 'Across the Secretary's Desk'. We extend our good wishes to our new contemporary.

NEW ZEALAND

New Zealand Society's Annual Report

THE recently-published fifty-sixth annual report and statement of accounts of the Council of the New Zealand Society of Accountants for the year ended November 30th, 1964, shows that membership at the year-end was 7,602, an increase of 139 over the previous year.

The first statements on accounting and auditing practice which are shortly to be issued as a guide to members have now been prepared in draft form and representative organizations outside the profession are being given the opportunity of expressing views on the recommendations which will then be revised and issued to members. The report states that the Society has been fortunate in that the professors of accountancy at all four universities in the country have been prepared to assist the work of the Society's Research and Publications Board.

On education, the report refers to the measures undertaken during the year under review to improve the effectiveness of the Society's educational programme. A conference on standards in examining, attended by moderators and assessors, proved a most valuable means of discussing aspects of the new syllabus introduced the previous year. Negotiations with Massey and Waikato Universities were continued, leading, states the report, to a very real hope that accounting tuition will be introduced at both universities in the near future.

The first summer school to be arranged by the Society was held in February 1964 at the University of Otago, Dunedin, and was an outstanding success.

Weekly Notes

IRISH INSTITUTE'S NEW PRESIDENT

AT the annual meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland held in Dublin last Saturday and reported elsewhere in this issue, Dr H. W. Robinson, PH.D., LL.B., F.C.A., was elected President for 1965–66.

Dr H. W. Robinson

The new President was born in Dublin on September 21st, 1913. He was educated at St Andrew's College and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1933 at the age of 19, obtaining First Place with honours in each of three degrees, Bachelor of Arts (first-class moderatorship and gold medal in Legal Science), Bachelor of Laws (Julian Prize) and Bachelor of Commerce. Later he was awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy and is now a member of the Senate of Dublin University.

After graduating, Dr Robinson became articled to Mr William Edmiston Crawford, then Secretary of the Irish Institute, and obtained First Place in the Intermediate examination of the Institute in 1935 and Second Place with honours in the Final examination, the following year. After spending seven years as an assistant to Messrs Craig, Gardner & Co, he became a partner in J. Sedgwick & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Dublin, in 1944 and in September 1953 founded the firm of Polden, Robinson & Co in conjunction with Mr Stanhope H. Polden, with whom he is still in partnership.

In 1941, Dr Robinson joined the Committee of the Dublin Society of Chartered Accountants, becoming Chairman of the Society in 1947 at the age of 34. He was co-opted to the Council of the Irish Institute in December 1955 and became Vice-President in 1964. He has represented the Irish Institute at congresses in Amsterdam, New York, Edinburgh and Vienna, presenting a paper to the 1962 Congress in New York. He is the author of Irish Statute Law relating to Income Tax, Surtax and Corporation Profits Tax, published in 1953, and A History of Accountants in Ireland, published in 1964, and has also published a number of papers dealing with accountancy and other subjects.

Dr Robinson is the chairman of Irish International Investment Trust and is a director of a number of companies including The Irish Times. He is a member of the Representative Body, the General Synod, the Commission for Sparsely Populated Areas and the Commission on Secondary Education of the Church of Ireland, a governor and honorary secretary of the Incorporated Society for Promoting Protestant Schools in Ireland, and a member of the Central Council and former honorary treasurer of the Irish Red Cross Society.

A widower with four sons, Dr Robinson's hobbies are travelling and collecting modern Irish paintings. Unlike many of his colleagues he is, he says, physically lazy and more at home in a wine cellar than on a golf course.

The new Vice-President of the Institute is Mr A. S. Boyd, F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Atkinson & Boyd, Chartered Accountants, of Belfast.

STEEL TAKE-OVER

THE political, economic, and technological case for putting the steel industry into public ownership is highly contentious. For the average accountant, however, immediate interest in the White Paper on Steel Nationalisation (Cmnd 2651, H.M.S.O. 1*s* 9*d*) will centre on the basis used to determine the compensation terms for shareholders. Quoted securities in the companies are to be acquired at a price corresponding with the mean of the quotations on all the relevant days on which they were quoted in either (a) the sixty-one months between October 1959 and the present; or (b) the six months beginning with May 1964, whichever gives the higher valuation. The quotations must, of course, be adjusted to take account of any rights or capitalization issue.

The alternative to this method would have been to adopt either of the conventional accounting techniques for valuing going concerns, i.e, the assets basis, or earning capacity based on x years' purchase of profits.

Neither of these methods is in fact suitable for an industry which has been subject to public control in the matter of prices so that its profits are in effect regulated, while the assets basis is unsuitable in so far as the industry has what economists term 'highly specific' capital equipment which has no alternative use except in that industry. All in all, the method adopted for the purposes of the White Paper is probably as fair as any which might have been devised.

A good deal of Press comment, however, has concentrated on the sharp but modest increase in steel share prices following upon publication of the White Paper. Such comment fails to appreciate the fact that for some months now share prices in the industry have been substantially depressed on account of fears of what the Government might do and also fails to recognize that there are shareholders who acquire their shares at prices above the proposed compensation levels.

A further complicating factor in determining the adequacy of the compensation is that the terms of the Government stock to be issued in compensation are unknown, and it is generally expected the capital value of such stock will tend to depreciate, as reluctant recipients seek to switch into other equities. From the national point of view, however, many readers may feel that the compensation terms are the least of the problems which will be debated at length during the coming months, if not years.

OVERDUE REFORM – BUT NOT THIS WAY

A DECIMAL CURRENCY BILL, presented as a private Member's measure by Mr Eric Lubbock, M.P., was due for its second reading in the House of Commons yesterday (Friday). At the time of writing its fate is unknown but the chances of success, even assuming that it was not crowded out of the short span allotted for debate, seen slim. Having considered the question off and on for nearly a century and a half, Parliament is unlikely to be stampeded into adopting such a major reform, however necessary, so quickly and so casually. There are at the moment too many purely doctrinaire issues to be pressed home or thrown out.

In any case Mr Lubbock's proposals, on purely practical grounds, are not likely to be popular. He suggests a standard unit of 5*s*, a rank outsider in a field which includes such favourites as the traditional pound and the 10*s* and 6*s* 8*d* units. In an age when halfpennies have virtually ceased to be of real value, no system which necessitates the minting of new cent coins worth three-fifths of a penny is likely to be countenanced. Nevertheless, Mr Lubbock is to be thanked for again bringing to notice the general question of currency reform which, if politicians were not so constantly preoccupied with subjective party and personal interests, would long ago have become a reality.

BETTER TRADE FIGURES

A BOARD OF TRADE SURVEY published this week on the trade figures for the first quarter of 1965 is fairly cheerful about the recent trend. It thinks that after allowing for invisible items the balance of payments may have been about in balance for the first quarter of the year.

The notable recovery in exports which began in the autumn of 1964 continued into the first three months of 1965 and the trade deficit was cut by more than two-thirds over the same period. It admits that quarterly figures of the trade balance tend to be irregular but it concludes that there could be little doubt of a significant reduction in the trade deficit of recent months.

The improvement in exports in the last six months has owed a good deal to a recovery in shipments to Western Europe as well as improved exports to the rest of the sterling area. The Board of Trade is firmly of the opinion that there was a notable downward trend in imports since the end of 1964 and that the import surcharge has had some effect in this reduction. Most of the decline in imports has been from the sterling area and North America. Imports from Western Europe continue to rise as a whole in spite of some reduction in goods liable to the import surcharge.

It remains to be seen if the encouraging trend of the first quarter is repeated in the second quarter of the year. A good deal of the fall in imports was due to lower food imports and this cannot be cut much further while purchasing power remains high. Some of the gain in exports is thought to be due to the fortuitous bunching of the export of large capital items in the first quarter of this year. Also, the rest of the sterling area cannot continue indefinitely to accept more British exports in return for lower imports with the United Kingdom. It seems likely that the struggle will continue for some time to keep the balance of payments anywhere near break-even point.

INSTITUTE E.D.P. COURSES

THE fourth series of electronic data processing courses run by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales took place at the Metropole Hotel, Brighton, this week.

There were four courses, each for fifty members, and the extent of the need for these courses is indicated by the fact that over four hundred applications were received for the 200 places. This enthusiastic response is a measure of the success of the courses in illustrating the principle of electronic data processing systems and in dispelling some of the mystery surrounding this complex subject.

It is interesting to note that members attending the series came from fifteen different countries as far apart as Malaysia and the U.S.A., Norway and Brazil.

About half the course members are engaged in industry and the remainder came from the practising side of the profession – a division which made for a useful exchange of views. There were also representatives from the universities.

A satisfactory aspect of the series (as in the previous one) was that all the course directors, technical advisers and syndicate tutors were members of the Institute; and credit is due to those firms and companies who so willingly released partners and staff to make the courses possible.

GROWTH IN SAVINGS

AN article in Economic Trends for April reports a considerable increase in personal savings during the last three years. As a percentage of personal disposable income, i.e., income after taxation, the proportion of income saved has risen since 1962 from 7·8 to 8·4 per cent in 1964. In money terms, of personal disposable income totalling £22,960 million in 1964, gross personal savings are estimated at £1,922 million.

Such estimates are rather unreliable due to the fact that they are balancing items between the income and expenditure estimates of the personal sector. In the last few years, however, there has been a considerable increase in the information available about financial transactions in the personal sector, particularly those with financial institutions. Hence the latest data are more reliable, although still subject to statistical error, and it seems that in 1964 sales by the personal sector of Government securities may have amounted to £97 million compared with £236 million in 1963. There is a steady switching from direct holdings of securities to indirect holdings through life assurance and superannuation funds, units trusts, the investment department of trustee savings banks and other financial intermediaries. In fact, in recent years, increases in life assurance and superannuation funds have accounted for more than half of the recorded increases in total personal savings.

Available data on corporate transactions in securities suggests that cash expenditure by industrial and commercial companies on acquiring businesses as going concerns operating in the United Kingdom amounted to £156 million in 1963 and £276 million in 1964. The net acquisition of overseas share and loan capital by United Kingdom companies is estimated at £61 million in 1963 and £76 million in 1964.

This is My Life . . .

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 275

'I'VE scrutinized the staff personal accounts,' said the internal auditor. 'They're fine, thank heavens, for a change; there's only one exception . . . Gus.' Before I could say 'not Gus again', the office manager chipped in briskly. 'He's really gone to town this month. We've not been able to straighten him out so perhaps you'd take over at this stage . . . after all, he's really rather a problem for your level in view of his, ah, domestic circumstances.'

They sat back and crossed their legs comfortably in happy appreciation of their skill in delegation.

The problem with Gus is that he can never keep his personal purchases account in order. Our system permits staff to buy in the departments at slightly preferential terms, subject to some not too stringent regulations. Total outstanding balance should not exceed one month's salary, for example, and debits should be paid off strictly within three months' maximum.

Gus is relatively well off, as assistant punched-card supervisor, but he's always hovering on the brink of insolvency. 'Total up to three months' pay,' said the internal auditor. 'Won't step up his mandate for monthly salary deductions at source,' said the office manager. 'It's those two blighted stuck-up worthless sisters of his,' he added morosely. 'They sponge mercilessly on the poor devil. My wife tells me they're always strolling around town, guzzling morning coffees and afternoon teas, gossiping their silly heads off and never doing a stroke of work.' The o/m's wife knows the inside story of every man-jack on our staff, and is not averse to embroidering colourful details in her work of re-circulation. 'Mesdames très difficiles', said the o/m, remembering his Easter holiday in Dieppe. The i/a expressed his views in more downright Saxon style, so the message was unmistakable.

Gus had a hunted look in his eyes when I saw him later. He was up to his neck in debt, he admitted; he couldn't possibly raise his instalments. Yes, his pay was good, very good in fact, but it just seemed to vanish, he didn't know how. Beads of perspiration stood out on his forehead.

It was difficult even to hint that his, ah, family might help him, aware as I was that the copy invoices in his file were mainly from the more expensive sections of our ladies' wear departments. He took it well, however. 'They weren't brought up to that sort of life,' he said loyally. I knew that he had been courting a girl before Christmas, a nice girl with a half-share in a little dressmaking business. . . . 'That fell through, I'm afraid,' he said. 'They thought it wouldn't work out satisfactorily.' He looked around rather brokenly for a moment, as if these two fine-feathered harpies were hovering behind his over-burdened shoulder.

'Perhaps your bank manager could be approached,' I suggested, but he shook his head grimly. 'I've tried. He's insisting I reduce the overdraft. He's as hard as the hob of hell. Perhaps the company would consider giving me a loan, enough to pay off my outside debts, mortgage and all. Then I could concentrate on paying you off by really worth-while monthly deductions.'

His tentative gleam of hope faded as he saw my expression. He sat back wretchedly, awaiting the worst. I found it hard to answer. He'd tried hard, had Gus, but the odds had been too great. Even his bank manager had been adamant . . . My bank manager has been a staunch friend in need in the past, particularly during a certain heartsickening month years ago, when I was suddenly hard hit . . . pity that Gus hadn't a friend in need somewhere. . . . Pity.

Even as I was authorizing special concessions for him, even as he was promising reform, I knew in my heart of hearts that it was only a temporary relief, for he'd never stand up to those two man-killers.

Finance and Commerce

Bristol Waterworks Company

EXISTENCE as a statutory undertaking does not prevent the Bristol Waterworks Company, as this week's reprint shows, from following limited company account presentation features or Stock Exchange recommendations – even to the inclusion of a ten-year record.

Commenting on the accounts, Lord Sinclair, the chairman, says that increased income is mainly due to a full year's operation of increased rates and charges put into effect towards the end of 1963. With capital spending over the £1 million mark the maximum permitted transfer to Contingency Fund has been made and the level of capital spending has meant that taxation against revenue has been eliminated by investment, initial and annual allowances.

As the end-year capital commitments show, capital spending will be heavy again this year. Ministerial sanction for additional capital and borrowing powers has been obtained and the higher level of borrowing and spending reflects the present problem facing most water undertakings – increased demand for water and shortage of supplies.

Planning Ahead

Even though in the Bristol Waterworks Company's area rainfall has been better than in some others, it has averaged 20 per cent below normal in the last four calender years and in the twelve months to last November 30th it was 40 per cent below normal.

From the point of view of replenishment of water storage, rain between April and September is of relatively little help and against this background of inadequate rainfall there is the increasing demand of industrial areas for heavier water supplies. In Bristol's case, a project at Sharpness, completed at a cost of £2¼ million, will make thirteen million gallons of water available every day but it is already clear that, if the increase in demand for water continues at its present rate, the Sharpness yield will be fully employed well within the next ten years and possibly in seven.

The company is therefore already beginning to plan for the next major source of supply – the drawing of water from the River Avon between Bath and Bristol. On the current revenue side, increased costs this year will considerably exceed any economies the company can hope to achieve by greater efficiency. Water rates, it is hoped, will be held at their present levels this year but, with the effect of corporation tax likely to mean an additional charge of over £200,000 a year on the company, an increase in rates looks inevitable later on.

Deferred Revenue

THE Provident Clothing & Supply Company is still wrestling with the Inland Revenue on the subject of the timing of tax payments on deferred revenue. The question, as the chairman explains to shareholders in his review with the company's 1964 accounts, is not one of how much the company should pay but of when it should pay it. Making his statement before the Budget, the chairman commented that forthcoming tax changes had complicated 'consideration of this very technical matter' but there were hopes that a suitable formula would soon be found.

In the meantime, provision for the additional tax has been made by way of deduction from deferred revenue in the balance sheet. In the notes to the accounts it is explained that deferred revenue is calculated on a straight-line method by which, after a proportion of the gross revenue is immediately brought in to credit to cover initial expenses, the balance is carried forward to be brought in proportionately to the collection of future instalments.

Of the total of £3,180,405 of deferred revenue at December 31st, 1964, the Inland Revenue is seeking to assess £1,053,023 as income arising prior to that date upon which taxation of £576,449 has been provided and is shown as a deduction in the balance sheet to give a net figure of £2,603,956.

Long-term Orders

TRANSLATING news of orders into terms of early profit has been the means of hopeful share buying often coming unstuck, particularly so when the order book contains a heavy proportion of long-term work. It is pertinent, therefore, that Mr E. D. MaGuire, chairman of Davidson & Co Ltd, the 'Sirocco' industrial fan concern, should go to some pains in his annual statement to shareholders to make the order position clear.

Orders booked in 1964 totalled £6·2 million, lifting the total order book to over £10 million. A large proportion of these orders, however, is for long-term projects which will only mature in 1968, 1969 and 1970.

Works output increased to £3·5 million last year but due to the long-term nature of some of the work, sales lagged at £3·2 million. Commenting on 1965 prospects Mr MaGuire says that output clearly should be higher than in 1964 but the long-term contract element will mean that invoiced sales are hardly likely to reach the 1964 value and, in that event, there 'would inevitably be some reduction in profits'.

The long-term order position in this company may be exceptional but, even so, the point is one which bears particular impact on immediate future profits and therefore needs clarification in the report.

CITY NOTES

HAVING been shocked by a £95 million Special Deposits call, when it was prepared to be surprised by a Bank rate cut, and having had news of steel compensation, when it was thinking of possible confiscation, the stock-market has had to change its values.

The steel compensation terms led to very heavy business in steel shares and there was a decided spill-over into other industrial equities. With £660 million quoted as the cost of steel compensation, the stock-market is free to talk in terms of 'the weight of money'.

It does not take much in the way of application of money weight to move present market prices. Jobbers have been keeping their books as even as possible for months and when, as a result of buying, prices rise steeply, there are usually more buyers prepared to take a favourable view.

The jump in prices which took place early this week had too feverish a look about it for confidence. And yet it would be unwise to underestimate the inflationary forces at work in the economy now and the extent of investment reaction to them.

* * * *

IT may simply be coincidence but there seems to be more than usual concern, in company statements, with share values. The chairman of Grays Carpets and Textiles recently suggested that the company's shares were undervalued. The chairman of Phoenix Assurance recently implied that insurance shares should, before long, regain their former high investment status. At the annual meeting of the Croda Organization the chairman's view was that the company's shares were high enough failing a marked expansion in earnings. It may be only coincidence, but perhaps a trend is starting.

* * * *

THE possibility of injecting an equity element into building society investment has exercised many minds inside and outside the movement for years. Fair interest and ease of withdrawal are the movement's investment selling points. Subscription shares are favoured but fixed-term shares are apt to be frowned upon in high places.

The life assurance companies have been able to team up with unit trusts to mutual advantage. It should not be beyond the ingenuity of the building societies and the unit trusts to combine in some way. The subject, it may be said, is not exactly dormant at the moment.

* * * *

THE use of probate valuation standards as the basis of Budget Day stock and share values for capital gains tax purposes is one of the many points of City criticism in the Finance Bill. In calculating gains tax liability where the Budget Day price does not apply, the taxpayer is effectively allowed his buying and selling costs. The use of probate valuation methods in cases where Budget Day prices are effective does not take costs into account. The Finance Bill, in fact, displays a noticeable ignorance of stock exchange and investment procedure.

Discounted Cash Flow

by A. M. ALFRED, B.SC., B.SC.(ECON.), A.R.C.S., F.I.S., and J. B. EVANS, B.A., A.C.I.S. (Chapman & Hall Ltd, London. 17*s* 6*d* (U.K. only).)

The full title of this book is Appraisal of Investment Projects by Discounted Cash Flow – principles and some short cut techniques. It was written by two members of the economics department of Courtaulds Ltd as a guide to some of the short cut methods used in that company and is, as a result, eminently practical.

The advantages and comparative limitations of this method are discussed and set beside the more traditional methods, and plentiful examples illustrate the application of the principles. For the purpose of the examples, company tax has been taken as 40 per cent approximating to the expected rate of corporation tax, which may be an immediate drawback to some but should be decidedly helpful to the majority.

The examples demonstrating the short cut methods are of particular value, using as they do profitability graphs covering plant of varying life and rates of annual allowance, buildings, working capital and revenue expenditure. If applying these produces too approximate an answer a more direct method can be employed, using separate graphs for the fluctuating effects of capital taxation allowance.

The book is able to provide in only seventy-one pages an excellent vade-mecum to all those – and they must be many – who need a practical guide, and a most valuable and helpful introduction to those who want as beginners to understand the subject.

Who Owns Whom

(Continental Edition) 1964–65. (O. W. Roskill & Co (Reports) Ltd, London. £8 10*s* net.)

Each year the continental edition of this now established work of reference gets bigger and better. Austria has been added to make a representation of ten Western European countries and the total number of parent, associated and subsidiary companies has risen from 36,000 to 46,000. This is mainly attributable to improved coverage of the member countries of the European Common Market and Scandinavia. The section listing American companies and their affiliations in Western Europe contains 130 new names of parent companies. All this new material has entailed an increase in the number of pages in an already bulky book from 964 to 1,164 but, by good husbandry, the publishers have contrived to add only 10*s* to the price.

It is hoped to make a start next year with the provision of addresses of parent companies which should be a further amenity to an already invaluable guide.

Accounting for Murder

by Emma Lathen. (Victor Gollancz Ltd, London. 15*s* net.)

Clarence Fortinbras, eminent New York accountant and author of Fortinbras On Accounts Receivable, is strangled with the cord of an adding machine when in the act of investigating, at the instigation of some disgruntled shareholders, the records of the National Calculating Corporation. John Putnam Thatcher, senior vice-president of the third largest bank in the world, is called in to assist and soon realizes that finding the solution is not a question of routine detection (finger-prints and all that) but of accountancy. The murderer is clearly the man who had something vital to hide from the unfortunate Fortinbras.

This is the setting of a compact and scrupulously fair thriller which relies on shrewd observation and meaningful dialogue rather than on incident for its compelling interest. The atmosphere of the executive suite, in which most of the talking takes place, is completely credible as are, also, both sleuths and suspects. In the problems of protocol and prestige which abound in the thickly carpeted corridors of commercial power, Emma Lathen has found ample material for her gently ironic wit.

A Dictionary of Economics and Commerce

by J. L. Hanson, M.A., M.ED.(LEEDS), PH.D..(LOND.). (Macdonald and Evans Ltd, London. 35*s* net.)

This dictionary contains over four thousand entries covering, as the title suggests, topics of interest in the field of economics, economic history, and commerce. The individual entries are of varying length and quality, most of them being a good deal more comprehensive and clearer than the definition of football pools: 'Although there is a tax on the whole pool, individual winnings, however large, are not subject to a capital gains tax.' Likewise the definition of international liquidity leaves something to be desired. On the whole, however, most of the definitions are fairly comprehensive and clear and the book may prove useful as a reference work for practitioners and students.

Discounted Cash Flow

SIR, – I am rather puzzled by the example of an investment project in Mr A. S. Ashton's article in your issue of April 3rd. After repaying the bank its loan of £1,000 plus interest at 10 per cent, there is no net profit left. The discounted annual average net cash flow given in the last column of Table 3 and repeated in the second column of Table 4, discounted at 10 per cent, is £187 4s. The present value of £187 4s a year for eight years is £1,000, so that this annual rate can be described as the correctly weighted average annual net cash flow. Using the 10 per cent rate, we can make up this figure and analyse it, by applying the annual value method, which I first expounded in an article in The Accountant of February 2nd, 1963, and which I first called the annual value method in the issue of July 27th, 1963, that is:

£1,000 at 10 per cent interest	100
Amortization of loan over eight years at 10 per cent sinking fund, i.e. £1,000 at £·08744 per £	87·4
Total discounted annual average	£187·4

The discounted cash flow rate of return is what is called in the literature the gross return. The D.C.F. net rate of return being the gross minus the borrowing rate of interest, and so we have a net rate of 10 per cent minus 10 per cent equals zero, which is all the investor would get. In this respect Mr Ashton's article is misleading, and the layout of his Table 4 is the kind of thing which has given rise to the belief that discounted cash flow assumes that the whole of the net cash flow goes to amortization and payment of interest – a belief which, I may add, is quite unfounded.

Yours faithfully,

Bushey Heath, Herts. E. J. BROSTER.

[Mr A. S. Ashton writes: It seems Mr Broster agrees with me that my hypothetical project pays 10 per cent, but disagrees over the method of calculation, and over terminology. The D.C.F. method certainly does assume that the whole of the net cash flow is utilized in the repayment of principal and interest. The rate of 'interest' involved is the rate of return the project pays to the company which invests in it and has no connection with the rate of interest the company has to pay on its borrowed money.

In my example I referred to the £1,000 investment in terms of a bank overdraft in order to demonstrate the mechanics of the method in a familiar context. In this illustration the bank was put in the position of the owner of the project and earned a return of 10 per cent. In the real world, the project will be owned by an entrepreneur and, provided the return exceeds the entrepreneur's cost of capital, it will be sufficient to pay interest on whatever funds he has borrowed and to pay him an acceptable return on his own equity: for his cost of capital is an average of the cost of his borrowed funds and of the return he expects on his equity investment, weighted according to the ratio of the borrowed funds to his equity investment.

Mr Broster's calculations involve an extra step – the calculation of the discounted 'average annual net cash flow'. This is time-consuming and apparently leads to the same result, but I cannot see how it adds anything to our understanding of the project. I therefore prefer the more usual – and simpler – D.C.F. approach.]

Existing Assets and D.C.F.

SIR, – Recently most accounting publications have stressed the benefit of D.C.F. techniques in assessing capital projects. None of the articles specifically deal with the practical method of valuing existing assets in order to complete a D.C.F. exercise. Conventional methods would relate project profits to net book values of capital employed, but this surely would not be strictly correct for D.C.F. purposes. If tax written down values of the assets were used these could be unrealistic with initial allowances as high as 30 per cent in the first year.

It would be interesting to hear views of what is capital cost for discounted cash flow purposes where existing assets are to be used on a new project.

Yours faithfully,

Hornchurch, Essex. D. F. RAY.

Taxation Cases

Full reports of the cases summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgments, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'.

Andrew v. Taylor

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
March 30th, 1965

(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Builder – Houses built for sale – Cessation of building – Plant and material sold – Schedule of unsold stock agreed – Sales of houses – Whether sales of trading stock – Whether cessation of trade – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 64 (10), 143.

The appellant carried on the trade of a builder from 1926, and up to 1940 built a large number of houses for sale. Building then ceased, and in the following year he sold his plant and material. In 1948 he rebuilt four of his houses for the War Damage Commission. In 1945 he was concerned in a back duty inquiry, and he signed a list of properties constituting the unsold stock of the business at March 31st, 1941. Thereafter from time to time he sold some of the houses; and where there was a profit, he was assessed under Case I of Schedule D, and where there was a loss, a claim for loss relief was made and allowed.

At April 5th, 1957, the appellant had forty-two of the houses in the list. In the course of the next four tax years he sold further houses in the list, and he was assessed, under Case I of Schedule D, for 1957–58 to 1960–61. The appellant considered that he should no longer be bound by the admission made in the list in 1945, and he claimed that from April 5th, 1957, he held the forty-two houses as investments; and that permanent discontinuance of the building basis had taken place at that date. It was contended by the respondent that the forty-two houses continued to be trading stock; that the appellant had not ceased business on April 5th, 1957, or at any subsequent date; and, alternatively, that if he had ceased business then or at a subsequent date, he was assessable in the year of cessation in accordance with section 143 (1) (b) of the Income Tax Act, 1952. The General Commissioners decided that the business had not ceased at April 5th, 1957, but that it had ceased at April 5th, 1961; and that the twenty-three houses then remaining were worth £27,100. The General Commissioners did not take into account the cost of realization, but it was agreed between the parties that there should be an allowance of 5 per cent therefor.

Held: the business had not ceased at April 5th, 1957, nor at April 5th, 1961.

(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Employment – Travelling expenses – Use of own car – Allowance by employer – Whether excess cost of running car deductible – Income Tax Act, 1952, Schedule 9, paragraph 7.

The appellant was employed in the Inland Revenue Department, and his duties involved visits to a number of towns. He made these visits in his own car, and was given allowances at rates stated in an official handbook. It was not a condition of his employment that he should travel in his own car.

The appellant contended that he was entitled, under paragraph 7 of Schedule 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952, to a deduction, in computing his emoluments under Schedule E, of the difference between the cost of using his car on official business, and the amounts of the allowances made to him. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the sum representing that difference was not an amount of expenses of travelling in the performance of his duties, and that he was not necessarily obliged to incur and defray the expenses out of his emoluments. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Hudson v. Humbles

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
April 6th, 1965

(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Back duty – Capital statement – No indication of source – Whether prima facie case of wilful default – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 47 (1), proviso, Schedule E.

Assessments under Schedule E were made on the appellant for 1946–47 to 1949–50, outside the six-year limit, and pursuant to the proviso to section 47 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, on the footing that there had been wilful default on his part. Assessments were also made for 1954–55 and 1955–56. To establish a prima facie case of wilful default the respondent produced a capital statement designed to show that the appellant had received sums of income for which he had not accounted, but the statement did not indicate the source from which the alleged income had been derived. The basis of the assessments was that the sums in question represented remuneration from a company controlled by the appellant and his wife.

It was contended for the appellant that there had not been wilful default; that the assessments for 1946–47 to 1949–50 were invalid, because they had been made out of time; and that all the assessments should be discharged. It was contended for the respondent that the capital statement disclosed a presumptive case of wilful default; that the appellant had not displaced the presumption; that those assessments had been validly made; and that the assessments for 1954–55 and 1955–56 should also be confirmed. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent, but they reduced the assessment for 1949–50 by £100 and that for 1955–56 to nil.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

Duckering v. Gollan

In the House of Lords – April 8th, 1965

(Before Viscount DILHORNE, Lord REID, Lord HODSON, Lord GUEST and Lord DONOVAN)

Income tax – Double tax relief – Income from abroad – Tax charged abroad on income arising during preceding year – Charge to income arising during assessment year – Income of year preceding changeover year not assessed abroad – Whether relief available – Finance Act, 1920, section 37 – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 122, 123 (Cases IV and V), 132, 347, Schedule 16, paragraphs 1, 2 – Finance Act, 1961, section 18 – New Zealand Income Tax Assessment Act, 1957, section 4 – Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (New Zealand) Order, 1947, Articles I (i), II (3), XIV.

The respondent, resident in the United Kingdom, derived income in the form of mortgage interest from New Zealand. The New Zealand fiscal year ends on March 31st. Up to 1957–58 inclusive New Zealand tax was charged on the income arising during the year preceding the year of assessment; but by section 4 of the New Zealand Income Tax Assessment Act, 1957, the tax had been, since 1958–59, charged on the income arising during the year of assessment itself, as compared with the rule in the United Kingdom that tax on income within Cases IV and V of Schedule D is charged on the income arising during the year of assessment measured by the income that arose during the preceding year.

Thus the amount of income that was charged to tax in 1957–58 in both the United Kingdom and New Zealand was the amount that arose to the appellant in 1956–57. The income that arose to him in 1957–58 never came into charge to tax in New Zealand, but was the measure of the income assessed for 1958–59 in this country. The amount assessed in New Zealand for 1958–59 was the amount that arose to him in that year, and this tax came to £1,033 9*s* 6*d*. The appellant claimed double taxation relief for 1958–59 on the footing that he was entitled to a credit for the New Zealand tax for the same year. Relief was refused by the Inland Revenue on the ground that the amount of the assessment for 1958–59 was the amount of income that arose on 1957–58; and that that amount never bore tax in New Zealand.

In an appeal to the Special Commissioners it was contended on behalf of the respondent that the appellant had paid no New Zealand tax which could be credited against the United Kingdom tax for 1958–59. It was contended on behalf of the appellant (i) that the income in respect of which relief was claimed was the income of the year 1958–59, (ii) that the assessment of this income to United Kingdom tax was in respect of the income of the year of assessment itself, whatever the basis of computing that income might be, (iii) that the United Kingdom assessment for 1958–59 was in respect of the income of that year, (iv) that New Zealand tax had been paid in respect of the income of 1958–59. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the appellant.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Inchyra v. Jennings

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)

(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Trust estate abroad – Annual transfer of percentage of capital – Whether income in United Kingdom – Whether aggregable with trust income – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 123 (Case V), 133, 134.

Lady Inchyra was entitled to the income from a trust fund in the United States; and on each anniversary of the death of the testatrix Lord Inchyra was entitled to receive, and did receive, a sum equivalent to 1 per cent of the capital of the trust fund. By the law of the District of Columbia, where the testatrix was domiciled, the sums equal to 1 per cent were capital items. These sums were payable for twenty years or for Lady Inchyra's lifetime, whichever period was the shorter.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that those items were also capital for the purposes of United Kingdom income tax; and that, alternatively, if they were income items, they were aggregable with the annual amounts of trust income. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the sums in question were income items for the purposes of United Kingdom income tax; and that they should not be aggregated with the trust income. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent on both points.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN IRELAND

SEVENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING

The seventy-seventh annual general meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland was held at the Intercontinental Hotel, Dublin, on Saturday, May 1st, with the President, Mr John Love, F.C.A., in the chair.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

In the course of his address Mr Love said:

The accounts and the report of the Council have been in your hands for some time, and I presume that I have your permission to take them as read (assent signified).

Mr John Love

Before formally proposing their adoption, I wish to deal briefly with some aspects of the work of your Council during the past year. The report lists the various committees of the Council, and also states the number of meetings of the Council and committees during the year. When one takes into account the various joint meetings with our sister bodies in Great Britain, one can gain some idea of the great amount of voluntary work carried out for the Institute by the members of Council. In this connection, I should like to pay a special tribute to those members of the Institute who have accepted co-option to various committees, although not members of Council, and who have given most valuable service on these committees. I would also like to thank the chairman and members of the Committee of the District Societies for their work for the Institute.

Mr James Graham resigned from the Council recently after ten years' service, and I know that you will join me in thanking him for all his services to the Institute, and in wishing him better health in the future. Mr Thomas Kenny, of London, has been co-opted in place of Mr Graham. We welcome Mr Kenny, not only for his outstanding personal qualities, but also as a representative on the Council (I think the first) of our members living and working in Great Britain.

The Institute Examination

Various changes in certain parts of the Institute Examination are noted in the report. The examination syllabus is under constant review by the appropriate committees, and it is hoped that the alterations now proposed will make the examination more practical, and will also be welcomed by the students. In particular I would refer to the reduction in the scope of the Law papers in Part III, and the introduction of the subject, Economics. It is considered that some aspects of the law previously dealt with in the examinations are not of vital importance to the qualified accountant in his normal work, whereas a knowledge of economics is becoming of increasing importance in the world as we know it today. Personally, I would hope that many of our members in the future would follow up their study of economics to a more advanced stage, either through the universities or by post-qualification study.

The Charter and Bye-Laws

As you know, a special general meeting of members was held on March 24th, followed by a poll, to deal with the amendments to the Charter considered necessary by your Council. These amendments have been dealt with in detail in the memorandum accompanying the notice of the special general meeting, and at that meeting, and have been outlined in the report of the Council.

By deleting from the Charter Amendment Bills the definitive nature of the proposals regarding Fellowship it is satisfactory to note that the Bills have received support from such a large majority of the members, prior to their submission to the Governments in Northern Ireland and in the Republic. It is a matter of great regret that we have been unable to join in the Certificate of Management Information and the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services from their inception, pending the approval of the Charter Amendment Bills by the two Governments concerned.

Regarding Fellowship, your Council considered that, in view of the divergence of opinion which has developed to their proposals, it would be preferable to postpone the effective debate on these until the amendments to the bye-laws are considered by the members, merely including permissive powers in the amendments to the Charter. The objective of this procedure was, of course, to obtain authority for the other desirable Charter amendments at the earliest possible date. When the Fellowship proposals are submitted in the amendments to the bye-laws, full consideration can be given to the desirability of the Council's proposals regarding Fellowship in the future, and I would hope that, in the meantime, the members will consider seriously the proposals of the Council in relation to modern conditions, and to the impact of, and the opinion of other sections of the world of business upon us as a profession. It is, I think, generally accepted that the accountancy profession must develop the system of specialization, and the Fellowship proposals are framed with that object in view. It would also seem that another factor tending to favour specialization would be the consolidation of accountancy practices into larger units comprising a larger number of partners in each.

Legislation

Reference was made by my predecessor, Mr Olden, to the Companies Act, 1963, which is now in operation in the Republic, and which has placed company law in the South of Ireland on a basis comparable with that in force in Northern Ireland, and in Great Britain. The Minister for Finance in the Republic has recently circulated the Income Tax Bill, 1964, which is a codifying Bill to consolidate the Income Tax and Finance Acts up to and including the Finance Act, 1964, and it is proposed that any income tax provisions in the Finance Act, 1965, will be included in the Bill. A more controversial measure is the Succession Bill, 1964, about which representations have been made by the Institute and by many other bodies. Substantial amendments to the original Bill have been made by the Minister concerned, and it is hoped that when the Bill finally becomes law, the freedom of the individual in the disposition of his property will be maintained, subject to appeal in appropriate cases.

We should, I think, record appreciation of the very considerable efforts which have been made by the Government in the Republic, and the Civil Service, to modernize the various aspects of the law which I have noted.

Co-operation

To a body such as your Institute, whose membership is drawn from the whole of Ireland, North and South, the more liberal atmosphere arising between the Governments of the two parts of our country is a development which can only bring pleasure, and indeed, very great benefit to all concerned. I am quite sure that we all welcome the initiative taken by the two Prime Ministers.

The Institute continues its association with our colleagues in the profession abroad, and was represented as a member of U.E.C. at the Congress in Vienna in 1964, at which one of the outstanding practical contributions was made by a member of Council, Dr J. F. Dempsey. As noted in the report of the Council, the Ninth International Congress is to be held in Paris in 1967, and another member of Council, Mr M. M. Connor, has agreed to prepare a paper for submission on that occasion.

Computer Appreciation Courses

Through our associations with our Dutch colleagues, we had the pleasure and benefit of the attendance of Professor A. B. Frielink, of Amsterdam, as one of the speakers at our first Computer Appreciation Course held in Athlone during the year. Professor Frielink is an expert in the application of computers, and is a member of the Netherlands A.D.P. Research Centre. His contribution to the course, like that of all the other speakers, was an outstanding success. I would like to take this opportunity of thanking again the two industrial undertakings in Dublin, and their executives, who contributed so much to the success of our first residential computer course, and to note with gratitude and thanks their continued co-operation for our second course which was held last month and was equally successful. On that occasion the speakers included Mr T. W. McRae, C.A., from Scotland, and Mr Graham Bass, from Esso Petroleum Co Ltd, England.

Institute Staff

I am sure that our members generally will join with me in regretting the resignation of Mr W. Stuart Orr as Secretary to the Institute. Those who have served on the Council during his period as Secretary for the last ten years, will appreciate his devoted attention to the interest of the Institute, the excellence with which he performed his duties as our chief executive officer, and his outstanding ability as a representative of the Institute to other professional bodies at home and abroad. I would like to thank him, personally, for his wise guidance to me, and his patience during my year as President, a sentiment in which I am sure that all the Presidents over the past ten years would wish to join. On your behalf, I wish him and Mrs Orr prosperity and happiness in the future.

We have been fortunate to obtain as our new Secretary Mr Colin Polden whom we welcome, and trust that he will enjoy his work for the Institute. We also welcome Mr R. L. Donovan, who joined us as Deputy Secretary earlier this year, and Mr G. B. Duffin, of Belfast, who took up the position of Joint Secretary and Treasurer on the resignation of Mr T. D. Lorimer. I would like to thank all the members of the staff of the Institute for their loyal co-operation and hard work during the past year.

Finally, may I thank my colleagues on the Council for their co-operation and their patience with me in the chair, and the members for giving me the privilege and pleasure of occupying the position of President of the Institute.

The report and accounts of the Institute were then adopted.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

As noted elsewhere in this issue, Dr Howard Waterhouse Robinson, PH.D., LL.B., F.C.A., was elected President for the ensuing year and Mr A. S. Boyd, F.C.A., was elected Vice-President.

ELECTIONS TO COUNCIL

No other nominations having been received, the following six retiring members were declared re-elected on the proposal of Mr H. C. Meharg, seconded by Mr C. P. Martin: Messrs A. S. Boyd (Belfast); Frank Cleland (Belfast); J. F. Dempsey (Dublin); R. E. McClure (Belfast); W. H. O'Donnell (Limerick); H. W. Robinson (Dublin).

Mr Thomas Kenny, of London, who had been co-opted to membership of the Council during the year, was declared re-elected under the provisions of Bye-law 9.

OFFICERS

The appointment of Mr Colin Ernest Polden, D.S.C., A.C.A., of Dublin, as Secretary of the Institute was confirmed on the proposal of Mr R. P. F. Olden, seconded by Mr John Bacon.

On the proposal of Mr G. A. P. Bryan, seconded by Mr D. H. Templeton, Mr George Brice Duffin, F.C.A., Belfast, was unanimously elected Joint Secretary and Treasurer.

The auditors, Mr Harry Hollingsworth Forsyth, F.C.A., Dublin, and Mr Sydney H. Laughlin, F.C.A., Belfast, were unanimously re-appointed on the proposal of Mr D. W. Pratt.

LONDON AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The twenty-third annual general meeting of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants will be held on Thursday, May 13th, 1965, at the Little Ship Club, Bell Wharf Lane, Upper Thames Street, London EC4, at 6 p.m. The report of the Committee for the year ended March 31st, 1965, and the accounts for the year to December 31st, 1964, are reproduced below.

Membership

The membership of the Society on March 31st, 1965, was 10,200 against 9,958 last year.

The area of the Society includes the counties of London, Middlesex, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Berkshire and Surrey, parts of Essex, Kent and Oxfordshire and the Channel Islands.

Programme

Details of the activities of the Society are given at the end of this report.

The Committee desires to express its appreciation and thanks to all those who have addressed meetings of the Society.

The Committee would welcome suggestions for future programmes.

London Regional Technical Advisory Committee

The London Regional Taxation and Research Committee has been renamed the Regional Technical Advisory Committee. Under the chairmanship of Mr B. A. Maynard this committee has been widened to include representatives from District Groups, Discussion Groups and members from the academic field. The committee has been divided into three subcommittees, the Taxation Subcommittee under the chairmanship of Mr J. A. Allen, the Management Subcommittee under the chairmanship of Mr A. W. Howitt, M.A., and the Accounts and Audit Subcommittee under the chairmanship of Mr D. Napper.

The London Regional Technical Advisory Committee and the subcommittees have given consideration during the year to current legislation and auditing, taxation and accountancy problems. These matters were either referred by the main Technical Advisory Committee or raised by members.

Activities of Subcommittees

(a) Students' Societies

Liaison has been maintained with the Chartered Accountant Students' Societies of London and Oxford through representatives of the respective committees, by the attendance of officers of the District Society at the Students' Societies' social functions, and by arranging meetings in London for those successful in the May and November final examinations.

A joint committee with the Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London, under the chairmanship of Mr C. V. Best, has been responsible for the organization of five intensive Introductory Courses for articled clerks. The committee is being enlarged to include representatives from the Council, the Education Authorities and the Colleges.

The report which was required by the Council on the structure, constitution, activities and finances of the Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London was submitted to the Institute in February 1965. The Committee approve the increases in the subscription to three guineas and in the entrance fee to two guineas.

(b) Recruitment

Contact with schools was maintained during the year. Tea parties were held on two consecutive days in July 1964 for school children and their parents and a cocktail party for principals, careers advisers and youth employment officers in February 1965. At each of these meetings Mr Alan P. Hughes addressed the guests after which they were able to question members and officials of the Institute.

Members of the Committee and other members of the Society have attended various careers conventions and exhibitions arranged by youth employment officers and schools and have advised school-leavers and their parents on careers in Accountancy. The Committee is most grateful to those who have given up time to visit schools.

(c) Advice to Members and Articled Clerks

A number of applications for advice were dealt with during the year by consultation with members of the Committee.

(d) Groups

A meeting of representatives of the branch and groups with members of the District Society's Committee was held during the year at which matters of mutual interest were discussed. Throughout the year members of the Committee, in particular the Vice-Chairman, have visited the various Groups.

A further meeting was held with representatives from Chelmsford, Guildford, Harrow and Sevenoaks to discuss the possibility of forming new groups in these areas.

Owing to the influx of members, the Taxation Study Group has subdivided into the Barbican Tax Group and the Taxation Study Group, as has the Taxation Discussion Group into the City and Central Taxation Groups. In addition the Harrow and District Discussion Group and the Statistics Discussion Group have been formed.

Members willing to take part in the formation of new groups are asked to complete and return the card enclosed with this report.

Benevolent Work

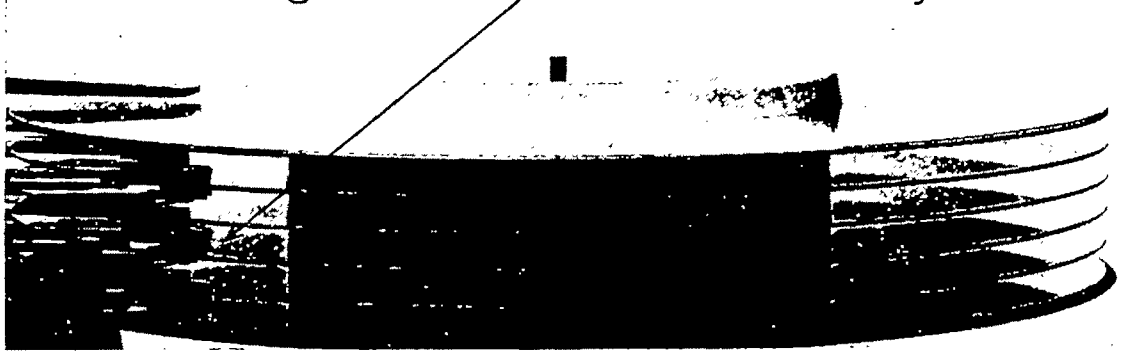
At the request of the Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association, members made visits to recipients of benefit.

It would be helpful if members would report any cases believed to deserve help and also offer to act as visitors.

Representation on Other Bodies

Appointments of representatives to advisory committees of local colleges and the Central London Productivity Association were confirmed and they have been continuing their useful work.

Invigilators for Examinations



The Committee has now been made responsible for providing invigilators for the Institute examinations in London.

The Committee is most grateful to those members who have acted and would welcome offers from other members able to help.

Interviewing Prospective Principals

On behalf of the Council thirty-nine panels were convened during the year to interview prospective principals under byelaw 48. Approximately two hundred candidates were interviewed, the panels reporting direct to the Council.

'WORKING FOR THE NATION'S CHILDREN' — No. 83

A GOOD TURN

An N.S.P.C.C. Inspector tells us that he recently called on a family who were reported for neglecting their child. Suspicion had arisen because the child never seemed to be taken out by his parents.

'People understandably get very upset when they are reported to us' says the Inspector 'but more often than not our informant does them a good turn. I found that in this case the child was so badly crippled that it was almost impossible for the parents to take him out. They had four other children and by dint of great sacrifice had bought a small van in which the father took him out whenever he could'.

'Fortunately I was able to obtain a stretcher bed for them, which made the van rides more comfortable, and also with the aid of the Health Visitor an invalid chair so that the mother can take the child with her when she goes shopping. On learning the true facts of the case my original informant expressed her willingness to pay for a holiday for mother and child but I am afraid the mother will not leave her other children even for a week.'

Cases like this – an actual case on the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children files – are dealt with frequently by the Society: for the scope of the Society's work is very much wider than cases of cruelty or gross neglect. If the Society can do anything at any time to help children whose welfare, happiness or future is in jeopardy, it will do so. This humanitarian work depends on your subscription and support. District Societies and the Council

A meeting of representatives of District Societies and members of the Council, with the President of the Institute in the chair, was held at the Institute on November 5th, 1964, when an exchange of views took place on matters of general interest to members of the various societies.

Council Membership

The Committee considered the names of the London members retiring by rotation from the Council at the 1965 Annual General Meeting and decided not to submit any other nominations.

The Committee was invited to submit names for the consideration of the Council in filling a London vacancy caused by the death of Mr P. F. Carpenter. From the names recommended, the Council selected Mr D. S. Morpeth, B.COM.

The Council of the Institute invited Mr D. C. Urry to join the Parliamentary and Law Committee.

Committee Membership
Nominated Members

The Committee wish to express their deep sense of loss on the death of Mr P. F. Carpenter in September 1964. He was largely responsible for the formation of this Society and was its first Chairman. At the time of his death he was a representative of the Council on the Committee.

The representatives of the Council of the Institute are Messrs G. R. Appleyard, J. H. Mann and E. F. G. Whinney.

The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London has been represented by Mr W. K. Wells, and the Beds, Bucks and Herts Branch by Mr E. J. Frary.

Vacancies on the Committee

In practice – Four vacancies

Mr F. J. G. Whinney was co-opted during the year to fill the casual vacancy caused by the election of Mr D. S. Morpeth to the Council.

Mr F. J. G. Whinney retires in accordance with Rule 18, and being eligible and willing to serve is deemed to be nominated for re-election.

Messrs G. F. Ansell, C. V. Best and Alan P. Hughes retire in accordance with Rule 7, and being eligible and willing to serve are deemed to be nominated for re-election.

Employed in the service of a practising accountant – Two vacancies

Mr D. R. Gray was co-opted during the year to fill the casual vacancy in this category which arose when Mr F. J. G. Whinney commenced to practice. Mr I. F. H. Davison was co-opted during the year to fill the casual vacancy in this category caused by the resignation of Mr L. J. Ezra, after nine years' service.

Messrs D. R. Gray and I. F. H. Davison retire in accordance with Rule 18, and being eligible and willing to serve are deemed to be nominated for re-election.

Not in either of the foregoing categories – Two vacancies

Mr C. W. Aston retires after twelve years' service on the Committee and does not seek re-election. He was Chairman in 1958–59 when the last Autumn Meeting was held.

Mr L. J. Rowley retires in accordance with Rule 7, and being eligible and willing to serve is deemed to be nominated for re-election.

Nominations may be submitted in any of the above three categories. Such nominations must be supported in each case by the signatures of seven members of the Society and must be lodged at the Institute not later than 4 p.m. on April 22nd, 1965. Nomination forms are obtainable only from the Secretary.

The Committee place on record their appreciation of the help given by those ceasing to serve.

Finance

The audited accounts for the year ended December 31st, 1964, are attached.

The larger grant from the Institute is a direct result of the appointment of the Assistant Secretary who has been with the Society for a full year. The increases in expenditure were due to the purchase of equipment, the general increase in stationery and postage through increased membership, the hiring of halls now that the Institute is no longer available and to the increased activities of the Society during the year. The increased grants to branch and groups were made to compensate them for the loss of subscription income following the introduction of an inclusive Institute subscription. This year conferences and social events have shown a net surplus of £337 against a net deficit of £37 in 1963.

The net result is a deficit for the year of £355, reducing the accumulated fund to £262.

Messrs Sydenham, Snowden, Nicholson & Co have kindly agreed to continue to act as honorary auditors.

SEVENTY-NINTH ANNUAL REPORT

We reproduce below the report of the Board of Governors of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association for the year ended February 28th, 1965, to be presented at the seventy-ninth annual general meeting of the Association to be held in the Assembly Hall of Church House, Westminster, London SW1, on Wednesday next, May 12th.

1. The Association on February 28th, 1965, consisted of 5,285 members, viz.:

The President	1,560 Annual Governors
185 Vice-Presidents	237 Life Members
21 Life Governors	3,281 Annual Members being a decrease of 239 during the year.

2. A list of the 145 (1964–141) cases in which assistance has been given during the year from the General Fund appears on pages 28 to 38[1]. During the year there were 18 (22) new cases and in 8 (5) cases former beneficiaries were assisted again. At February 28th, 1965, there were 120 (119) current cases. Four cases were assisted from the Special Fund. In addition to the cases mentioned in this paragraph, the Executive Committee examined eight applications in which assistance had to be refused. The Secretary also dealt with about twenty other cases; in some instances the applicants were not eligible to receive assistance and the others either withdrew or did not pursue their applications.

3. The accounts for the year ended February 28th, 1965, duly audited, are annexed to this report[1].

4. The total expended by the Association in relief since its formation in 1886 amounts to £398,141. The principal figures from the accounts for the last five years are:

Year	Relief	Subscriptions	Investment Income
1960–61 ..	19,103	8,444	9,943
1961–62 ..	21,030	8,798	10,491
1962–63 ..	23,841	12,884	11,727
1963–64 ..	23,965	14,271	14,869
1964–65 ..	24,999	14,217	22,151

5. Reference was made in the last report of the Board to the fact that the Institute financed the whole cost of the secretarial and clerical work of the Association which was then estimated to be between £4,000 and £5,000 p.a. The Board considered that it would be reasonable for the Association to contribute £3,000 p.a. towards this cost. In view of the opposing views which were expressed at the annual general meeting in 1964, the President (of the Association) stated at that meeting that, while making no promise, there would be a form of machinery whereby the views of the members of the Institute would be obtained. The Institute has now evaluated the cost for the year ended December 31st, 1964, of secretarial and clerical assistance, together with accommodation and general office services, at £7,013 and charged this sum to the Association; at the same time a contribution is made to the Association so that the effective net payment to the Institute is £3,862. The position from January 1st, 1965, is slightly complicated by the fact that the Secretary of the Association became a part-time officer of the Association at that date and his salary is now being paid by the Association. The matter is explained in detail in the memorandum which is to be sent out by the Institute to all members of the Institute. The Board is most grateful to the Institute for its invaluable support from the time the Association was founded and it would be entirely inappropriate, and indeed churlish, to be critical of the charge for administration. The Board recognizes that there may be widely differing views as to the degree of financial support that should be accorded by the Institute to the Benevolent Association and is most grateful to the Institute for its action in seeking the views of the members of the Institute on the matter.

6. The relatively small increase in the expenditure on relief is largely due to the new policy adopted in regard to national assistance, a matter referred to in last year's report. In recent years the National Assistance Board has made appreciable increases in its basic rate. The present basic rate of £3 3*s* 6*d* for a single person (which is additional to the rent payable) is to be increased this month by a further 12*s* 6*d* a week. In these cases the Association is permitted to supplement the Board's grants within certain limits. During the year seven of our beneficiaries have been asked to apply for national assistance and in each case a higher aggregate income has resulted. A change to a national assistance basis is only made after the matter has been fully explained to the beneficiary by a member of the Institute and never when there are dependent children or where temporary assistance is necessary. In view of the continuing rise in the cost of living, the Board is again reviewing the basis on which relief is afforded.

7. Christmas food hampers have, as usual, been sent to the majority of our beneficiaries. Gifts of clothing and special donations have been made in appropriate cases. The cost to the Association of this expenditure has been reduced by the income from the H. F. Holloway Memorial.

9. More than one-half of the Association's income is derived from its investments and the Board is grateful to the many benefactors whose bequests and gifts have gone to build up the capital of the Association. It is not practicable for reasons of space to commemorate these benefactions in detail in the annual accounts and the Board therefore publishes a list of major benefactions not otherwise mentioned individually in the annual accounts. The list on page 27[1] includes only individual benefactions of £2,500 or more.

10. Grants from the W. B. Peat Memorial Scholarship Fund amounted to £170. The number of cases assisted during the year was five (1964–6).

11. The Board records with great regret the resignation of Mr P. F. Granger from the Executive Committee of which he had been a member since 1957.

12. Mr R. A. Coupland, F.C.A., has been elected to fill the vacancy on the Executive Committee.

13. The Association has continued to take an active part in the management of Crossways Trust of which it is a founder member. The Secretary of the Association has been a member of the Board of Governors of the Trust since 1949 and has been a member of its Finance and General Purposes Committee since it was formed. Two other members of the Institute also have seats on the Board. Ten of our beneficiaries are in the homes of the Trust; a member and his wife, both over 80, have recently entered a home, thus filling the last two places for which the Association has nominations. The Board intends to increase its participation in the Trust if and when opportunity permits. In most cases the Trust is able to obtain from the appropriate local authority a substantial grant towards the cost of maintenance of a resident in a home of the Trust. The cost to the Association is therefore relatively small in relation to the benefits which are available to beneficiaries.

14. The Board is at present examining the possibility of participating in a housing scheme which will provide accommodation suitable for old people. The National Corporation for the Care of Old People has assisted in the formation of the Hanover Housing Association which has approached the Benevolent Association.

15. During the year the Accountants' Christian Fellowship has very kindly established a panel of its members who are prepared to interview members who through protracted illness or other misfortune are unemployed. This will be of great assistance to the Secretary who from time to time is called upon to advise members or former members in cases where some measure of rehabilitation is necessary. The Board is very grateful to the Fellowship for its assistance which has already led to the re-employment of a former member of the Institute.

16. The Board records with great regret the death of Mr Leonard Walter Bingham, F.C.A. Mr Bingham became an honorary auditor of the Association in 1955 and served in that capacity until 1963, after which he continued to act as a joint auditor for a very modest honorarium. The Board wishes to place on record its great appreciation of his services.

17. The Board has appointed Mr B. W. Rivett, F.C.A., a partner of the late Mr Bingham, to fill the casual vacancy.

18. It is the policy of the Board to ensure that as far as possible a member of the Institute living near a beneficiary, or applicant for relief, acts as a referee and is available to give advice when required. Such assistance from members is of the greatest value to the Executive Committee in considering applications. The Board wishes to thank district societies, branches and groups, for their help in appointing members for this purpose and also to thank those appointed for the considerable time and trouble they have taken in helping beneficiaries.

19. The Board wishes to record its warm appreciation to Mr R. W. L. Eke, Mr G. L. C. Touche and Mr D. A. Clarke as members of the Investment Subcommittee of the Executive Committee of the Association.

20. The Board is grateful to Messrs Markby, Stewart & Wadesons, the honorary solicitors, for their services.

21. The Board thanks the editors of Accountancy and of The Accountant for the publicity they have given to the affairs of the Association during the year. Brief reports of the quarterly meetings of the Executive Committee are published in these journals.

22. The Board wishes to place on record its high appreciation of the work of the officers and staff of the Association and of the Institute.

23. Mr Bernard William Rivett, F.C.A., retires as auditor and offers himself for reappointment. Mr Leonard Pells, M.A., F.C.A., has intimated that, as he will shortly cease to be a joint auditor of the Institute, he does not offer himself for reappointment as auditor of the Association. A resolution regarding the appointment of auditors for the ensuing year will be placed before members at the annual general meeting on May 12th, 1965.

Applications under this section are referred to the Advisory Panel in cases where the Inland Revenue raise objection to the transactions proposed.

The agreement deals mainly with the payment of contributions and sickness and unemployment benefits.

It does not cover retirement pensions or widow's benefit, but it is hoped to conclude a further agreement covering these two benefits shortly.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' HOCKEY CLUB

Match with Insurance Hockey Association

A rousing match between the Chartered Accountants' Hockey Club and the Insurance Hockey Association played on the Phoenix Assurance Ground at Forest Hill, resulted in a win for the Insurance H.A. by the odd goal in nine.

The first eleven minutes produced five goals and gave the Insurance side a 3–2 advantage. In fact, they held a 3–0 lead at one time, but goals by Hines and Threlfall brought the Accountants to a more respectable position.

Shortly after the commencement of the second half, the Accountants drew level through Hines's second goal. This merely inspired the Insurance H.A. to better things, and they romped away to a 5–3 lead. The gap was again narrowed by Threlfall's second goal, but despite persistent efforts by both sets of forwards, the final score stood at 5–4 to the Insurance H.A.

Match with The Law Society

In an enjoyable game at Surbiton Hockey Club, the Chartered Accountants' Hockey Club were defeated by The Law Society by three goals to one. At half-time the score was one all, but in the second half, constant attacks by a determined centre-forward were too much for the defence of the Chartered Accountants who conceded two further goals.

Match with Inland Revenue

A match with the Inland Revenue at Grove Park resulted in a win for the Chartered Accountants' Hockey Club by three goals to nil.

For much of the first half the Accountants were without their goalkeeper, who arrived later, but the backs dealt soundly with the sporadic Revenue attacks. After James had scored early on for the Accountants there was no further score at half-time. In the closing minutes of the second half, the Accountants scored twice more through their centre-forward, the first goal coming after a splendid run and centre by Bryce, and the second after a good pass by Fryer.

THE HALIFAX BUILDING SOCIETY

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH

ANNUAL MEETING will be held on

MAY 10th, 1965

IAN A. D. MACLEAN, ESQ.

(Abridged)

In commenting on the current scene it is not my intention to enter the field of political controversy. Building societies have no political axe to grind. Their sole object is to provide, to the best of their ability, a service to their investors and borrowers in the light of the circumstances in which they find themselves at any given time, and in so doing to attempt to maintain a fair balance between investor and borrower.

This latter point is of particular relevance at present when building societies, including the Halifax, have increased the mortgage rate to the (for building societies) exceptionally high figure of 6¾ per cent. There were two reasons for this increase: first, the increase in the rate paid to investors necessitated some increase in the rate charged to borrowers. Secondly, the margin between investors' and borrowers' rates needed widening. When last the investors' rate was 3¾ per cent (income tax paid) the borrowing rate was 6½ per cent. Since that time the composite rate of income tax which the Society pays on behalf of its investors has been increased to 5*s* 10*d* and there will be a further substantial increase now that the new standard rate of income tax has come into force. This increase in the income tax payable by the Society meant that widening of the margin between borrowers' and investors' rates was inevitable if societies were to be enabled to expand to the extent necessary to meet the very high mortgage demand while at the same time maintaining their reserves at an adequate percentage of their assets.

It is natural that people should ask whether it was necessary to increase the rate paid to investors and whether, in fact, adequate funds would not have been received at the previous rate of 3½ per cent. The events of the winter, however, made it clear that the 3½ per cent rate was no longer competitive with most short or long term rates available elsewhere. The increase in building society rates was not an automatic reaction to the increase in Bank Rate to 7 per cent, it was an adjustment made some time subsequent to the Bank Rate increase and only made in the light of current experience and likely future trends.

Much has been said and written on the margin between investors' and borrowers' rates, and the effect of these on reserves. It is argued that building societies are unduly cautious in their opinion of what constitutes an adequate reserve and that reserves could be safely allowed to run down to a level which is much nearer that prescribed as a qualification for Trustee Status. But one of the reasons why building societies have been successful in attracting funds is because investors have had full confidence that their money will be carefully looked after. It is for this reason that I am convinced that a satisfactory margin above the minimum is essential if the confidence of the public is to be maintained.

I cannot give any indication how long the present rate structure will last. The demand for mortgages is very heavy and, at the time of writing, it is clear that a balance has not yet been struck between that demand and the supply of funds to meet it. Moreover, although the tax position of societies should change for the better when the proposed Corporation Tax comes into operation this will not be until 1966 and we do not, of course, know the precise extent to which societies will benefit.

During the year the total assets of the Society increased by £78,602,397 and now stand at £792,070,177 an increase of 11 per cent over the figure at January 31st, 1964. The liquid assets which were 16·2 per cent at the end of the preceding year were reduced as a matter of policy to 14·7 per cent. This reduction leaves the percentage of liquid assets well above the minimum required for Trustee Status and the reduction has helped the Society to maintain a high and consistent level of mortgage advances.

The general reserve and balance carried forward stand at £29,327,359 representing 3·70 per cent of assets compared with 3·69 per cent for the preceding year.

The surplus for the year available for reserves was £2,595,159 to which was added £388,527 profit on realization of investments. The increase in the composite rate of tax from 5*s* 5*d* to 5*s* 10*d* which took effect last year meant a reduction in the available surplus of some £450,000. This is the sort of contingency which always has to be borne in mind and the fact that, despite this increase in taxation, the Society was able fractionally to improve its percentage of reserves to total assets was due to the decision of the Directors, taken over a year ago, to reduce the rate of growth by the temporary reduction in rates to which I made reference in last year's statement.

The most important development during the year regarding the administration of the Society was the decision to order an I.B.M. 360 Model 40 Computer.

We hope to obtain delivery in two years' time, but when it is installed it may be a further two or three years before every one of the Society's branches is transferred to the computer system. When this happens, the advantages to the public of a decentralized system of accounts will remain unimpaired, while at the same time we hope that our service will be improved in other ways.

Live wire with a high potential

We've often been called the 'liveliest wire in the building society world'. To earn a title like that takes years. But we worked at it. Thought ahead. Took progressive steps. Looked after our investors. And in the last ten years we've watched our assets multiply more than threefold whilst the number of accounts has nearly doubled. In the next ten years we'll probably repeat the performance—and more! Because now, with the help of a super-efficient computer and a new administration centre, we've opened up the future. We could grow up to four times our present size and still cope easily with the expansion. Try testing us—with your investment.

Simpler Taxes – a Missed Opportunity

As the President of the English Institute remarked in his address at the Institute's annual meeting last Wednesday (reproduced elsewhere in this issue) the Budget, with its fundamental changes in the pattern of taxation, is going to make heavy demands on accountants. The additional work, both in assimilating the new legislation and preparing the computations on behalf of clients will, he points out, warrant higher fees. On the other hand, not all practitioners are entirely happy at this prospect. The work involved is considerable and not all clients will be appreciative of the extra work entailed in settling their affairs with their Inspectors of Taxes. This would appear to be borne out by the reported request from a member of the Institute to the Council, to call an extraordinary meeting to protest against the complexities of the Finance Bill.

The submission of accounts and tax computations has become customary in the United Kingdom because it facilitates agreement of figures and has done much to ensure that the administrative system works smoothly – to the mutual benefit of the taxpayer and the Revenue. The law does not require a taxpayer to do more than make a true and correct return of his annual income. He can, therefore, decline to compute the amount of his assessment; indeed, he need not submit accounts in support of his return of income. But if he does not take these steps he cannot complain if he is asked for evidence in support of the figure which he returns as his business profits.

While we should not like to see any developments which might undermine the confidence which exists between the Revenue and the accountancy profession, at the same time some protest is certainly required about the manner in which the current Finance Bill has been drafted. Why should it be necessary for the legislation dealing with two new taxes – corporation tax and capital gains tax – to be legislation by reference to the Income Tax Acts? This method of drafting the new provisions creates unnecessary complexities and makes a clear understanding of the Bill almost impossible. Anyone who wishes to obtain even a reasonable appreciation of its terms must constantly refer back to the old law. The opportunity to introduce a measure of simplification into the tax system has been missed by the failure to present a self-contained Corporation Tax Bill. This should be the real basis of protest by the accountancy profession.

Finance Bill – Second Reading Debate

IT is perhaps significant that when the House of Commons approved the second reading of the Finance Bill on Tuesday, it was by a majority of only three votes which is the Government's lowest majority so far. The Government's position was not improved by the fact that the first two Labour Members who spoke on the Bill, apart from the FINANCIAL SECRETARY, were critical of some of the Bill's provisions. They were preceded by Mr EDWARD HEATH who said:

> 'I must offer a protest against so much legislation by reference in a Bill which makes fundamental changes of this kind. It places an intolerable burden on hon. Members. I see that even the chartered accountants, according to The Times, have declared that this is the last straw. . . .
> 'Everybody will agree by this time that any idea that this had led to a simplification of the tax system is way out through the window.'

Opening the debate, the FINANCIAL SECRETARY paid particular attention to clause 14 which is directed against deduction of entertainment expenses. He said that so far as possible the disallowance would be made in computing business profits. In other words he wanted to allay fears that this would be a tax on the employees who do the entertaining. Where a company paid the bill for entertaining or made specific reimbursement to its directors or employees for business entertaining done by them the payments would be disallowed in arriving at the tax liability of the company. The same rule would apply where a director or employee received an allowance which was specifically earmarked for business entertaining. In these cases the burden of what he euphemistically called 'this allowance' would fall on the employer. The tax position of the director or employee in those cases would remain unaffected. The FINANCIAL SECRETARY went on to say that it was impracticable to make the tax disallowance in that way when the director or employee received a general expenses allowance out of which he had other expenses besides entertainment. It was equally impracticable where the director or employee did the entertaining out of an inclusive salary. In these two latter cases the disallowance would have to be made in the Schedule E assessment on the director or employee.

This is a frightening prospect for the very many employees and managing directors who are already bound by a service agreement which obliges them to do business entertaining out of an inclusive salary or an omnibus expense allowance. It is they, and not their employing companies, who will have to foot the new tax bill. If this is equality and fairness, then the words must have changed their meaning. It is not so much (as a Labour Member himself said) a matter of taxing free grouse moors, penthouses and yachts. Rightly or wrongly (and apparently rightly in the case of overseas buyers) there is an inveterate tradition of entertaining in many industries, and it certainly seems very hard that an employee who has undertaken to do it for an inclusive salary should now be forced to pay Schedule E tax and surtax on sums out of which he is contractually bound to do entertaining on behalf of his company. This is really retrospective legislation against employees.

Clause 14 (8) exempts the provision of assets which it is part of the company's trade to provide. The FINANCIAL SECRETARY gave as examples the free samples which the public receive, and the free tickets for first nights which are sent to members of the Press. This sub-clause certainly opens a wide door.

The FINANCIAL SECRETARY attempted to justify on logical grounds the exemption of betting and pool winnings from capital gains tax, but he made a poor showing. What is to prevent the inclusion of a clause declaring that say football pool winnings shall be taxed as a capital gain?

The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER, who wound up, was on perhaps stronger ground when he defended the termination of tax relief for 'overspill'. However, such relief has helped to build up our foreign assets and could well be justified on that footing alone.

Rates or Taxes?

NOT since early 1963, when the new valuations for domestic hereditaments were disclosed, has there been such an outburst of criticism of the rating system as has been provoked by the announcement of the rate poundages for 1965–66. For England and Wales overall the increase in rate poundages is 11½ per cent; while in the Greater London area the increase has averaged 20 per cent. As in the revaluation, the impact has been felt more sharply in some areas than in others. Thus, a few of the new London boroughs have experienced rises of 40 per cent and more. While by no means as large, substantial increases in areas as wide apart as Manchester, Cardiff, Peterborough and Reading have prompted widespread criticism of both the rating system and the local councils.

Between 1957–58 and 1965–66 rate revenues in England and Wales have virtually doubled; there can be few households whose incomes have risen to the same extent! Nor is there any relief in sight. The cost of local authority services during the coming years will continue to rise more rapidly than even personal incomes, much less the national product. A rising population of both young and old people imposes a special strain on local services. More boys and girls are at school; more are staying on into the sixth form and then going on to institutions of higher education. The prospective increase in teachers' salaries can hardly be borne alone by the local rate. Higher interest rates, improved and expanded welfare services for all sections of the community, including in particular the aged, higher wages and salaries as well as other costs, have all contributed their share of the ratepayers' burden.

Last week the House of Commons debated the problem of local finance which is rapidly becoming a major domestic political issue. At present, neither of the two major parties is yet prepared to nail its colours to the mast of any particular policy. Nevertheless, it would help considerably if the issues could be put fairly and squarely to the public, since there is a widespread belief among householders that there exists some means whereby it should be possible to consign the rating system to limbo and reduce their fiscal burdens. Never was any hope so ill-founded.

No tax is so unpopular, yet much of the criticism is surely exaggerated. Much play is made of the hardship caused by the rate. It is true that households with incomes under £312 p.a. and between £312 and £520 are hard-hit; they pay 8·1 and 6 per cent of their gross income in rates. Such households are predominantly made up of retired persons. But for those households earning £780 and more, and the bulk of earner households are in this category, the percentage of income taken in rates is less than 3 per cent. Contrast, for example, the £500 million rates paid by United Kingdom domestic ratepayers in 1963 with their outlays of £1,181 million and £1,286 million on alcoholic drink and tobacco respectively, or the £629 million on purchasing motor-cars and cycles and the further £188 million spent on running them. It can hardly be asserted in the face of such facts that the community is bearing a crippling burden.

The retired populace apart, the Allen Committee demonstrated conclusively that for the average household with earner heads the rate was, at least in relation to income, a nominal charge. Nevertheless, the mode of presenting this charge in two, or at the most quarterly bills, was open to criticism in these days of hire-purchase and credit purchases. The retired – who have grounds for complaint – fall into three main categories. The first, comprising about half of some 3 million households with incomes below £10 per week, are already in receipt of national assistance. The National Assistance Board usually meets the entire rate and rent charge. In the second group a substantial number, estimated at between half a million and 800,000, are probably deserving of national assistance but not claiming it. Some of these households are in serious straits but, as the Allen Committee showed, their plight cannot be blamed wholly on the rates. The local rate is just another straw on their backs. The third group is not in need of assistance or any help; one in seven of retired householders have incomes in excess of £1,040 p.a.

If the aged poor were exempted from the local rate, then some £60 million of rates would have to be met from other persons' pockets. There is also a case for some form of marginal relief, i.e. for elderly people with incomes just over £10 per week who are certainly not eligible for national assistance, but are finding the mounting rate bill burdensome as it outstrips their resources. The only problem here is how such selective relief is to be given. Should it be operated by local authorities and should there be some sort of means test?

The average domestic ratepayer has no objection to helping the aged poor. But he is not concerned solely with their plight, but also with his own. What can be done for the family man with young children, about £20 per week income, and a substantial mortgage on the house he is buying; or the couple in the same income bracket in London or the South-east (the most heavily rated areas) occupying a flat, the rent of which, with rates, probably absorbs about a fifth or more of their incomes. The present rate burden is bad enough; but what will happen the year after next with 7 per cent more personal income and 20 per cent more rates?

The popular panacea is to increase Government grants to local authorities. The first and obvious objection to this proposal is that it merely shifts the burden from the ratepayer to the taxpayer. He may, in many cases, be the same person. If, however, the rate is regressive and national taxation is on balance progressive, then there is no doubt that the burden will be shifted on to the better-off earner household for whom high rates could then be replaced by even larger additions to income tax. Not even the most vocal of the new middle class critics of the rate want that. But, in any case, is it a realistic proposal with present levels of taxation? One of the few interesting remarks made in the Commons debate was the reminder by the Joint Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Housing, Mr ROBERT MELLISH, that an £800 million increase in Exchequer grants, equal to one-third of the cost of local authority services, would represent something in the region of 2*s* in the £ on the standard rate of income tax.

Probably more indicative of the Government's thinking on future policy was Mr RICHARD CROSSMAN's rejection of the suggestion that last November he should have added £200 million to the general grant to keep rates down. This was neither 'sane, responsible, nor sensible', since it would have meant 6*d* on the income tax 'when only 7 per cent would have gone to the old, the sick and the poor; the rest to those who did not need it', including, of course, industrial and commercial occupiers. Many ratepayers will doubtless feel that since industry and trade are able to set their rate charges against their trading receipts for tax purposes, there is a case for greatly increasing the rate contribution of industry and trade. This argument, however, overlooks several points. First, to the extent that additional rates will reduce tax revenues from business, the Exchequer will have to recoup itself elsewhere; secondly, existing rateable values of business hereditaments already reflect the tax relief available; and finally, it should not be forgotten that such additional costs will tend to be passed on in higher prices. The simple fact is that for the majority of earning households, the individual fiscal burdens are not going to be changed significantly if local services are financed in the main from grants rather than from rates.

The main hope for relief of householders in those areas where the rates are highest, i.e. the South-east and London, lies in a revision of the grant system. Grants meet about 55 per cent of total rate and grant-borne local outlays. With the prospect of still higher expenditure some increase in that ratio is inevitable. But there is need for some redistribution of the grants. The Allen Committee has already drawn attention to the fact that the Rate Deficiency Grant over-compensates the 'poorer' authority. The shift contemplated by the Government from the general grant to specific grants could also produce a revised weighting structure to take less account of rateable value as a measure of resources and more of local incomes. But, in the last resort, the most effective alleviation of hardship will be achieved by selective measures of relief. These are not likely to include the average householder. Indeed, they may cost him a still larger contribution in either rates or taxes.

The sole hope of easing the taxpayers' burden is by slowing up the rate of growth in public expenditure. Outlays on education, housing and the welfare services are destined to grow at a pace far beyond any possible rate of expansion in the national income. Someone must decide the priorities.

CORPORATION TAX

Computing Profits—I

THE corporation tax is expressed to be charged on 'profits', which are defined in clause 42 (4) (b) of the Finance Bill as meaning 'income and chargeable gains'. The expression 'chargeable gains' has the same meaning as in Part III of the Bill. Part III includes clause 21 (10) which says:

> 'Every gain accruing after April 6th, 1965, shall, except so far as otherwise expressly provided by this part of this Act, be a chargeable gain, but subject to the provisions of Part II of Schedule 6 to this Act (which restricts the amount of chargeable gains accruing on the disposal of assets owned on April 6th, 1965).'

The word 'gain', as such, is not the subject of definition, but there are elaborate provisions in Part III for the computation of chargeable gains. These are so worded as to exclude income chargeable to income tax. Not all of the gains accruing after April 6th, 1965, are 'chargeable gains' since there are various exempting provisions, of which perhaps the most significant is that in favour of the taxpayer's principal residence.

Just as 'gains' are not defined as such, equally there is no definition of 'income'. The rubric to clause 49 is 'General rules for computation of income'. Sub-clause (1) says that, except as otherwise provided in Part IV of the Bill,

> 'the amount of any income shall for the purposes of corporation tax be computed in accordance with income tax principles, all questions as to the amounts which are or are not to be taken into account as income, or in computing income, or charged to tax as a person's income, or as to the time when any such amount is to be treated as arising, being determined in accordance with income tax law and practice as if accounting periods were years of assessment'.

Income tax law and practice are subject to constant change. For each accounting period one must take the income tax law applying for the year of assessment (i.e. the income tax year of assessment) in which the accounting period ends. It is the law applying to the charge to standard rate tax (not surtax) on individuals. However, one must include the income tax provisions applying specifically to companies for the year 1965–66 in relation to sub-clause 49 (1) matters. One must exclude such of the Income Tax Acts as make special provision for individuals.

It follows from clause 49 (1) (2) (and clause 49 (3) so provides) that income is to be computed, 'and the assessment shall be made', under the like schedules and cases, as apply for the purposes of income tax, and in accordance with the rules applicable to those schedules and cases. Thus each source of income tax income will be the subject of, in effect, a separate computation, as though one were computing an income tax assessment. However, the amounts so separately computed have to be aggregated with each other and with the chargeable gains in order to arrive at the total profits for corporation tax purposes. Now although the Bill incorporates by reference all the complicated provisions for the various schedules and cases of income tax, it has to be remembered that one of the objects of the new system is to get away, as far as companies are concerned, from the artificial basis periods which tend to bedevil income tax and create so many anomalies and opportunities for avoidance. To make it crystal clear, clause 49 (4) directs that nothing in clause 49 is to be taken to mean that income arising in any period is to be computed by reference to any other period. The sub-clause preserves the power of apportioning income of a whole period to different parts of a period.

Clause 45 (1) provides that a company is to be chargeable to corporation tax 'on all its profits wherever arising'. It is to be chargeable on profits accruing for its benefit under any trust, or arising under any partnership, in any case in which it would be so chargeable of the profits accrued to it directly (clause 45 (2)). What precisely is meant by 'accruing for its benefit' is not explained. A company could be a contingent beneficiary in a trust under which income was being accumulated. It might be that after a period of accumulation someone would exercise a discretion under which the accumulated income belonged to the company, but this could be years later. Whose is the income in the meantime? For whose benefit is it accruing? Contrariwise, a company is not chargeable to corporation tax on 'profits' accruing to it in a fiduciary or representative capacity except as respects its own beneficial interest (if any) in that 'income'. This sudden switch in clause 49 (2) from the word 'profits' to the word 'income' is presumably an error, and indicates that the Finance Bill as published is the result of a good many amendments to an original draft, the draftsmen not being quite sure whether they were going to speak of 'profits' or 'income'. It has been affirmed recently that when a company is in liquidation, the assets are really held in trust for the contributories, subject of course to satisfying the creditors. This fact was no doubt in mind in the drafting of clause 45 (2), which provides that profits accruing to a company during its winding up are to be chargeable on it.

It is in the clause dealing with the meaning of 'accounting period' that one finds the expected negative direction that corporation tax is to be assessed and charged

> 'on the full amount of the profit arising in the period (i.e. the accounting period) . . . without any other deduction than is authorized by this Act'. (Clause 47 (1).)

This echoes the provisions in sections 126 and 137 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, in relation to Cases I and II of Schedule D. Clause 47 (1) goes on to declare that profits are to be assessed 'whether or not received in or transmitted to the United Kingdom'.

Not content with this, clause 49 (5) directs that, in computing income from any source, no deduction shall be made

> '(a) in respect of dividends or other distributions; nor
> (b) in respect of any yearly interest, annuity or other annual payment or in respect of any such other payments as are mentioned in section 169 (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, but not including sums falling with section 169 (4) (rents, etc.)'.

This prohibition is subject to clause 50 and to any enactment applied by clause 49; a somewhat bewildering proviso.

Taking (a) first, what are 'dividends or other distributions'? Dividends alone are not defined. On the other hand clause 43 (5) makes it clear that no

> 'dividend or bonus deductible in computing income as mentioned in section 444 (2) of the Income Tax Act, 1952 (which relates to industrial and provident societies and bodies engaged in mutual trading), is to be regarded as a distribution.

It seems, therefore, that the ordinary co-operative society 'dividend' is not intended to be treated as a dividend for the purposes of clause 49 (5), but it would have been helpful if the Finance Bill had said this expressly.

The word 'distribution' receives a very extended definition in Schedule 10 which is applied to Part IV of the Bill by clause 43 (5). Schedule 10 has two parts, the first part gives the general definition, and Part II extends it in relation to 'close companies'. Even the general definition in Part I runs to eight paragraphs spread over three pages. The object of this very extended definition is not so much to prevent the deduction of disguised distributions as expenses, as to ensure that disguised distributions are subjected to their due burden of deduction of income tax at the source. It will therefore be more appropriate to examine this definition in relation to tax on distributions. The general income tax law which is imported into the definition of income is sufficient to prohibit the deduction of distributions as expenses.

Turning now to (b) in clause 49 (5), the question arises whether, in mentioning section 169, the sub-clause is meant to be confined to payments which are payable 'wholly out of profits brought into charge to tax' within the meaning of section 169 (1) (3). It seems not; the object of clause 49 (5) is to forbid the deduction of payments of the nature described, whatever the source of the payments. This is made clear by the express exclusion of rent payments from the prohibition. Rents are indeed mentioned in section 169, but only for the purpose of making clear that section 169 does not apply to them. It should be emphasized that the clause 49 (5) prohibition applies to the computation of income from a source. Clause 48 makes separate provision for the deduction of what are compendiously known as 'charges' in arriving at the omnibus chargeable profits of the company.

Your Reading can be Rapid and Efficient

Instructor of Reading Efficiency Courses, Hull College of Technology

An article outlining the reasons why accountants – and many other professional men and women – read unnecessarily slowly and suggesting some simple methods for improving efficiency in daily routine reading.

ACCOUNTANTS are not alone in experiencing difficulty in coping with the volume of reading that is required of them; many professional and business men and women face the same problem. In our working lives most of us feel restricted and oppressed by the amount of reading material that finds its way on to our desks, and on which we have to make decisions or take action of some kind, or with the contents of which, in our own interests, we have to be familiar. The problem is such that many items, if not essential, are declared 'Pending' and left until they can safely be discarded without being read. Yet most people are capable of reading at about twice their present speed, and of significantly improving their comprehension in the process.

The problem encompasses, of course, more than a difficulty in handling a considerable amount of material satisfactorily. There is the question of time, for example, and it is particularly with this factor that courses in reading efficiency are designed to deal. If one can learn to read faster and more efficiently, one can free oneself for other more important aspects of one's work.

Reasons for Slowness

There are many reasons for slowness in reading: poor eyesight; inability to concentrate; poor layout of material; inadequate lighting; the level of difficulty of the material; and lack of sufficient confidence in one's own abilities are some of the more common reasons. Courses in reading efficiency cannot cure eyesight troubles; for this is the optician's province and it is as well, if your reading is slow, to have an eye test before trying to improve your reading abilities by other methods. Improvements in the layout of material can only be effected by the typist or the printer. Inadequate lighting can be improved by sitting near a window to read or by increasing the intensity of the lighting in the room. The level of difficulty of the material is decided largely by the writer, but reading efficiency courses can teach techniques which help to minimize the difficulties in this and in a number of other respects.

Most slow or average readers complain of poor comprehension. That is to say, they find difficulty in retaining information, in making deductions, in drawing inferences and conclusions, and in arriving at value judgements on the basis of the content of material. Particular difficulty seems to be experienced in retaining the information read. As the amount remembered affects comprehension, most courses explain drill techniques for improving memory. Another frequent difficulty is vocabulary, and here again drill work can significantly improve performance.

As most of us have enough reading to do during working hours without taking on additional material during our leisure time, we tend to read less and less at home until often we read very little apart from the morning or evening newspaper. This means that we do not get the wide and varied reading that is essential if we are to make permanent improvements in our reading habits. We have so much reading to do as a part of our work, that we forget that reading is a rewarding leisure activity as well. When asked why we do not do the reading we know we should, we reply that we have not the time. What we really mean is that we are not sufficiently motivated to give it a higher priority in our activities. If we can double our reading speed, however, we may find that we become more interested in reading simply because we can achieve more in the time available to us.

Accountants' Problems

As far as accountants in particular are concerned there are, in addition to the problems outlined above, probably other difficulties arising out of a greater familiarity with the language of numbers than with the language of words. The restriction which this kind of specialization enforces is that one simply does not get the variety of material which is essential for a full development of reading abilities. But if these are some of the problems faced by slower readers, how do reading efficiency courses provide solutions?

Before this question can be answered, it is necessary to understand one or two elementary facts about the nature of the reading process and the mechanics of the act of reading. If you stand at a window overlooking a busy road and watch a car pass from left to right, your eyes move smoothly because they are focused on the car. If, however, you wait until there is no traffic and try to follow an imaginary car as it moves from left to right, anyone who watches your eyes while you do this will tell you that they move in a series of small jerks. This is what happens when you read. As your eyes move from left to right along a line of print, they move in a series of small jerks, stopping momentarily on each word (assuming that you are a rather slow reader). These pauses, called 'fixations' and each lasting for about a fifth of a second, are when the actual 'reading' is done.

The eye can only accept information in detail when it is allowed to fixate momentarily on the material before it. The slow reader finds that he has to fixate on every word in order to understand what he reads. The reason for this is that he has never tried to train his eyes to see a group of words at each fixation. In other words, he has never tried to widen his eye span. The efficient reader, on the other hand, either naturally or through training, has learned to widen his eye span and to see written material as consisting of groups of words, or 'thought groups', rather than as single words, each of which is equally important and independent.

Training by Drill

This training consists, in most courses, of two principal elements: drill work and discussion. Speed, vocabulary (and, incidentally, spelling) and retention of information can all be improved by regular exercises – by drilling oneself, in fact. Comprehension is best improved by discussion, since this is really the only way in which one's understanding or interpretation of information can be immediately challenged, if wrong; or reinforced, by agreement with other readers, if right.

In addition to this kind of work, the nature of one's approach to the process of becoming a faster and a better reader is most important. Unless your attitude contains three elements you will not benefit as much as you might do.

First of all, you need to have confidence in your ability to increase your reading speed and to improve your comprehension. If you feel that you cannot improve or are convinced that you will not improve, you are placing yourself at a disadvantage. You will still improve, regardless, but you will improve much more and much more quickly if you have this very necessary self-confidence in your ability to do so.

Secondly, you need to be determined to follow all the instructions given you during a course or in a book. Unless you are prepared, for instance, to practise regularly you will not benefit as much as you might; so a certain amount of self-discipline is important.

Finally, to act as a spur to your efforts you need to compete with yourself. In a process such as this, there is nothing to be gained by competing with other readers; but you will progress much more quickly if all the time you are trying to improve upon your own best performance so far. This self-competition is one of your best aids to success when you are working on your own.

If these three elements are made part of one's attitude towards the process of improving one's reading efficiency, the final results will be a better reflection of one's abilities. A half-hearted student never achieves half as much as he might do if he improved his attitude towards his studies.

Results at Hull

The kind of results one may expect are indicated by the results I have had with the courses I have instructed at the Hull College of Technology. In the last two years we have not had a single student on a course who has failed to increase his reading speed. Some students have suffered losses of up to 20 per cent in their comprehension but these have been rare and have invariably been caused by trying to read too quickly too soon. The average increase in reading speed last session (1963–64) was by 112 per cent and the average improvement in comprehension was by 18·6 per cent. The lowest increase in reading speed was by a journalist who improved by only 13 per cent, and the highest increase was achieved by a young lady who teaches in a local firm's day continuation school who improved by 200 per cent – from 216 words per minute to 653 words per minute.

Many people are sceptical of the results that most courses of this kind claim. The only real answer to such doubts is to attend a course and see what happens. It is, admittedly, hard to believe that so many people are inefficient in their reading methods; yet it is true. Since the courses began in Hull in September 1962, only one person has failed to increase his reading speed and that was over two years ago. He began the course with a reading speed of 355 words per minute. At the end of the course – a six-week course held from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. immediately after working hours at a local firm – his reading speed was 312 words per minute, a decrease of 12 per cent. His comprehension rating, however, rose from sixty-seven to eighty-seven – a rise of 30 per cent! This is the only skeleton in our closet and even this student didn't leave without the 'consolation prize' of a worth-while improvement in his understanding of what he read.

Highest Speed Achieved

Strangely enough the highest speed ever achieved by one of our students was by a research director who attended the same course. He began the course with a speed of 489 words per minute and reached 1,397 words per minute by the end – an increase of 186 per cent. However, his comprehension was reduced by about 5 per cent, falling from ninety-two to eighty-seven, which is still high (the average student ends with a score of seventy-five to eighty). Accountants generally do well. For example, one who attended the course recently began with a speed of 437 words per minute and increased to 760 words per minute – an improvement of 74 per cent. His comprehension rose from fifty-seven to seventy-six. Why accountants usually do so well, I do not know, but they all report that they are able to deal much more effectively with the reading they have to do at work after they have attended the course.

For those who would like to pursue the matter further, there are a number of books available which provide a 'teach-yourself' course in rapid and efficient reading. A few of the most readily obtainable ones are listed at the end of this article and any public library will be able to recommend others. For those who are unable to attend a course but would like to learn how to become a more efficient reader under the guidance of a tutor, it is perhaps worth mentioning that there is at least one correspondence course available.

A Method to Try

For those who are still undecided about whether they need to improve their reading skills, there is a simple method which will reveal just how much one is capable of improving one's ability to communicate more effectively. If the reader takes his favourite morning newspaper and selects a passage from it – preferably a regular daily feature that is usually about the same length – he should use this passage for a week in the following way:

On Monday – read the piece selected at your normal speed. Time yourself to see how long it takes you. Note down the time taken. Setting the paper aside, write down the main points the writer has made. Now check with the original and allow yourself a percentage (for example, if the writer made five main points and you gave three of them correctly, this is a 60 per cent level of comprehension). Calculate your speed in words per minute (divide the number of words in the passage by the time taken, in seconds, and multiply by sixty). Make a note of your results in a notebook and cut out the article you used and keep it for reference. Calculate how long this exercise as a whole took you.

On Tuesday – following the same procedure, try to read faster and try to complete the whole exercise in less time than it took you on Monday. Aim to improve your comprehension percentage.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday – keep trying to read faster, improve your comprehension and complete the exercise as a whole in less time.

On Saturday – follow the same procedure and then compare your performance with your performance on Monday. You will find that simply by trying you are already beginning to read faster, which means your eye span must be widening. You will also find, very probably, that your comprehension percentage has improved.

This exercise, carried out over only one week, does not constitute a comprehensive reading efficiency training course, but it should serve to show you that you can improve your reading skills if you want to. No one has yet followed such a course, to the writer's knowledge, and failed to improve his reading efficiency either in speed of reading or level of comprehension or both.

Financial Planning

by B. A. MARSDEN, A.C.A.

MUCH has been said recently about planning the national economy, particularly about the control of prices, profits and wages, and only time will tell whether any success will be achieved. But little has been said about the equally important need for planning the future activities of individual companies.

The distressing attitude is prevalent among many business men that when a firm is doing well it does not need 'cost accountants and the like', and when a firm is not doing well it cannot afford them. In fact, when a firm is doing well it is precisely the time when the wise and prudent business man will build up his administrative force to make a study of what the future holds and what action to take when the cyclical pendulum starts its inevitable downward swing.

Financial planning can valuably and successfully be applied to all types of organization: productive and non-productive, finance and service organizations, and even to non-profit-making bodies.

Similarly, the varying aspects of this function can serve the interests of a firm whether it is expanding or contracting or stagnant, because in the performance of his duty to the owner, the shrewd business man will lay variable plans for the future some time before events crowd in.

Leading firms in the motor industry have developed the science of planning to fine limits, partly because of sheer necessity, since costs of tooling for a new model are so high and competition so fierce; and every precaution is taken against failure. The Bloom organization is an example of a business which failed to take advantage of administrative or planning facilities but lurched along blindly, putting its faith in selling dynamism which proved inadequate and resulted in a dramatic and helpless collapse.

First Essential

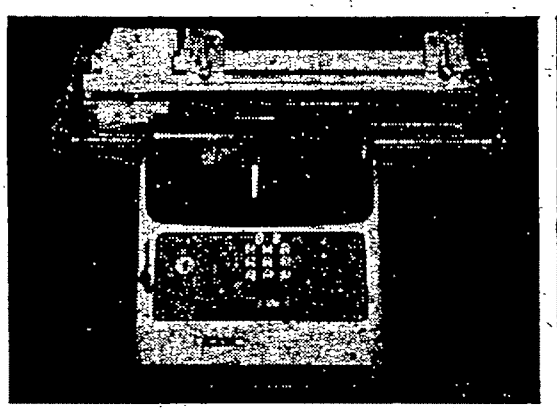
The first essential if the exercise, which must be a continuous perennial process, is to succeed is to create the right psychological atmosphere for the serious and constructive collection of relevant basic information and forecasts. Thus, the idea must initially be sold to top management who are empowered to issue directives with sufficient authority to make their busy executives shut out the restricting daily clamour and sit down to think for a while about the future. Only in this way is it possible to explode as excuses the condemnation of the exercise as 'crystal ball gazing' or 'impossible whilst this Government is in'.

Professional staff must be available to develop the framework of the planning procedure, collect the reports and forecasts and knit the whole together in short reports to top management which show, firstly, the effect of past and current trends on future sales and margins based on present productive capacity or financial structure, and secondly, the variable effects of different courses of action in capital investment programmes and product switching. This means that the plans have to be translated into financial terms, which must involve a senior accountant in the planning team, especially since it is a human weakness to overestimate income and profits and to underestimate expenses and losses.

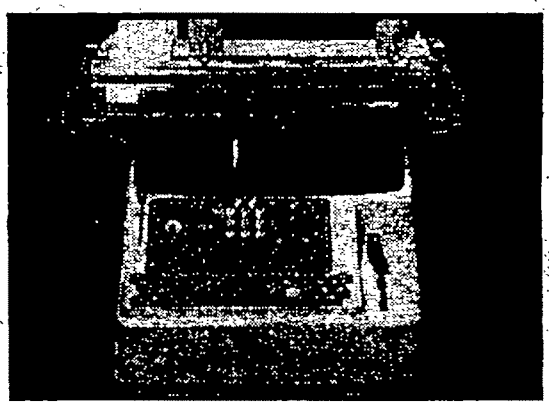
Budgetary Control

Another essential is an efficient system of budgetary control, which need not be accompanied by standard costing. Most firms have some such system but often it is crude 'guesstimating'.

The period for long-term budgeting should not be less than five years and for short-term budgeting not more than one year. It is an easy step to slot the short-term budget into the five-year plan and use it as the first base year. Each time the plan is revised the time span moves forward.



Having assessed the future, based on current knowledge and past experience, the forecaster is faced with the problem of analysing the alternative courses of action.



The two fundamental problems are how much capital expenditure should be sunk in which projects; bearing in mind the need for adequate return on investment and on which products should existing resources be concentrated following a study of rising costs and the changing pattern of consumer demand.

The economy will remain a fickle creature until management is applied and recognized as a science. Financial planning is a pillar of efficient management but its value will remain retarded until its use is exploited far more than it is today.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

at the Institute's meeting held last Wednesday

THE eighty-fourth annual meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales was held at Church House, Westminster, on Wednesday, when the following address was given by the President, Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A.

A report of the proceedings of the meeting and of the business sessions held during the afternoon, will appear in next week's issue.

Before I submit for your consideration the annual report of the Council and the accounts of the Institute for the year 1964, I would like to speak on a few matters which are of general importance to ourselves, our clients and indeed the whole country, as well as on one or two subjects domestic to our Institute.

Mr W. Guy Densem

I have tried to keep this address short because I want to leave as much time as possible for general discussion so that I and my colleagues on the Council may hear the views of those members gathered here today. It is not easy to keep in close touch with the thoughts of nearly forty thousand members although there is a link through individual Council members, through our district societies and through the courses which we arrange. One of the most pleasurable duties of a President is attendance at district society dinners which gives an additional opportunity to meet members. It is most encouraging to record a considerable increase in both the membership and the activities of our district societies.

Aid to Management

We all appreciate that this country is experiencing economic difficulties. There is increasing competition in world markets from highly industrialized countries not only in Europe but also in North America and the Far East. The newly emergent countries in Africa and Asia also seek to establish their own industries. To increase our share of world markets or indeed even to hold our own, it is vital for the industry of this country to be truly competitive and this can only be achieved by greater efficiency not only in the productive processes but also in management.

Accountants are often represented as concentrating their whole time and energy on the solution of taxation problems. This is placing undue emphasis upon one aspect of an accountant's work. Our profession is also in the forefront in the development and application of new techniques aimed at helping industry to improve its productivity and efficiency. The provision and interpretation of management information, the use and application of computers, the installation of systems and procedures, mathematical and statistical analyses, the use of discounted cash flow and other techniques in the evaluation of new capital projects, are only some of the many fields in which the profession is making an important contribution to effective management and to the national economy as a whole.

Courses

Many of you are aware of the success of the Institute's electronic data processing courses. There were, for example, over four hundred applications for 200 places at the recent Brighton course and members from fifteen different countries attended.

A questionnaire was sent recently to all members asking them to indicate what other specialized courses they would like. No fewer than 6,000 replies have already been received. A sample analysis suggests a great demand for courses in management information and also in certain more specialized aspects of management techniques. Until all the replies have been processed it will not be possible to determine the extent of the call for other courses or the form they should take but only recently the Council agreed that a pilot course in management information should be held at the end of October.

The summer courses at Oxford and Cambridge, which are not devoted to any one particular subject, continue to be well supported; they provide an excellent opportunity for members to meet one another and to exchange ideas and views in the relaxed atmosphere of the colleges.

The Budget

Turning, however, to the not unimportant subject of taxation, the Budget, with its fundamental changes in the pattern of taxation, is going to make heavy demands on the time and skill of accountants. The work of digestion and clarification is likely to go on for many months and it is going to fall heavily on the members of our profession. This is obvious, and indeed the general public seems to be sufficiently aware of it to comment on the additional fees we may earn.

I suppose we can hardly object to that, but somehow we must convey to the general public, as well as to our clients, the emphasis on the word earn. I am speaking first of all about the sheer additional effort required – the mental and physical strain falling upon those already doing a very full day's work. It takes years of training to become an accountant; still more years to gain full experience of our taxation system; and still more to acquire the skill to absorb and apply changes. We cannot increase our membership overnight. We must just accept the new load imposed upon us.

I am not so naïve, in pointing out these facts, as to expect that we shall receive public gratitude for our work. Professional men are never, and business men seldom, heroes.

Incorporated Accountant Members

The text of the Council proposals relating to incorporated accountant members, published in the accountancy Press in March, is reproduced in paragraph 16 of the report. In general it is proposed that, subject to important limitations, which are believed however to affect relatively few members, incorporated accountant members may apply to be redesignated as chartered accountants and to use the letters F.C.A. or A.C.A. as appropriate.

Although I do not intend to go into the proposals in detail perhaps I should mention the limitation to which the Council attaches the greatest importance. It is that a member should not be permitted to commence to practise in the United Kingdom as a chartered accountant member unless or until he has had appropriate experience in the office of a practising accountant in the United Kingdom.

It is hoped that the proposals will be generally acceptable to incorporated accountant members and to the membership of the Institute as a whole.

Technical Statements

The report outlines some of the technical activities undertaken during the year.

These include important submissions on company law amendment made to the President of the Board of Trade. The Government has indicated that it intends, in the next Parliamentary session, to introduce legislation amending the Companies Act and I hope that the progressive reforms proposed by the Jenkins Committee will be implemented, particularly in the direction of greater disclosure to shareholders, of meaningful financial information.

Professional Conduct

The Council is most anxious to preserve the high standard of professional integrity which has always characterized members of the Institute. It is, however, conscious of the need to keep the Institute's ethical requirements in line with the changing conditions of business life and the ever widening sphere of work undertaken by members. With this in mind, the Council has, since the publication of the report, issued a statement on 'Mechanized Accounting and Computer Services' and has also approved a statement relating to management consultancy which will appear in a few days' time in the published proceedings of the Council[1]; these two statements have been prepared after consultation with the Scottish and Irish Institutes.

Practitioner Inquiry

Since the publication of the report on the Practitioner Inquiry, several committees of the Council have given close attention to matters within their terms of reference to which the report drew attention. In addition, selective compilations have been prepared from the questionnaire and a further report will be published this summer. This further report will be sent to all practitioners and will be obtainable without charge by other members on request.

You will have received with your copy of the report and accounts an order form for the practice administration booklets which are being prepared under the auspices of the Public Relations Committee. As you will see, these cover a wide range and I am sure they will contain something of interest to every practising member.

Education and Training of Articled Clerks

The report indicates the steps already taken by the Council to implement the proposal enunciated in the report of the Committee on Education and Training that 'the Institute should not feel bound as a matter of principle to confine itself to being an examining body but should consider itself free to intervene directly or indirectly in the arrangements for study and tuition to such extent as may appear to be necessary from time to time'.

Much has been done by the Education Committee and by district and branch societies, yet the achievements and efforts to date are but a beginning. With valuable co-operation from educational establishments, courses were held at thirty-five centres at suitable times of the year. These have emphasized the importance of a good start to a professional career, given the newly articled clerk his bearings and shown him some of the basic tools of the profession. There has, of course, been some diversity and experiment – it is not the Council's wish to impose complete standardization – but there has nevertheless been unanimity of purpose. The ultimate aim is to assist students to study more effectively and to gain more benefit from their practical work. A good foundation has been laid for more advanced courses, some of which have already been initiated.

Upon the quality and training of our articled clerks depends the future wellbeing of our Institute. Large scale public investment in further education presents opportunities of which advantage should be taken to improve our methods of professional education and training. Also, the expansion in the university population presents a changed recruiting situation. Young men and women with higher academic qualifications now strive for university places. The Council would like more graduates to enter our profession. Selection, however, rests mainly with members in practice.

Examinations

I would like to pay tribute to the manner in which the moderators and examiners are dealing with the extra work placed upon them. The report shows the substantial rise in the number of candidates at examinations. The figure for the Intermediate and Final examinations in March and May this year is 6,204 compared with 3,959 at those examinations last year.

The increase in the number of examinations as well as in the number of candidates has raised formidable problems for the examiners and for the staff of the Institute. This added pressure is by no means over. The old and the new Final examinations will run side by side until the end of 1966 and by that time there will be the new examination for the Certificate in Management Information.

The Certificate in Management Information

'Education is for life' is a well-known adage. Education certainly goes on throughout life and does not stop short when an articled clerk qualifies for membership. Furthermore, we all recognize that within the period of articled service there is a limit to the amount of knowledge, particularly technical knowledge, which can be absorbed. It is here that the Certificate in Management Information examination, first to be held in October 1966, is intended to make its contribution. Its purpose is to encourage members, whether in industry, commerce or practice, to pursue studies in subjects with which they will be increasingly concerned. It is thought that the examination will require a period of not less than two years' part-time study after admission to membership but there will be no requirement as to practical experience.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

As you are aware, there is to be a special meeting immediately following this meeting at which the approval of members will be sought to permit the scheme for the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services to proceed with the participation of four instead of five bodies. It is hoped that the necessary approval by the members of the four bodies will be obtained so that the Joint Diploma Board may be formally constituted in June 1965.

Much preliminary work has been done and it is expected that an early announcement will be made giving details of the examinations and other procedures leading to the grant of diplomas.

Overseas Matters

All members, and particularly those working outside the United Kingdom, will appreciate from paragraphs 113–123 of the report, that the Institute continues to play its part in co-operation with overseas professional bodies as well as concerning itself with the interests of our own members.

Annual Accounts and Finance

The Council hopes that members will find the changes made in the form of presentation of the 1964 accounts helpful and in particular the analysis of the net revenue expenditure over main functions both informative and useful. I have touched on a number of activities which have involved increasing expenditure but I have not yet mentioned one matter which, as you will appreciate from the balance sheet, is of major importance when considering the general financial position. I refer, of course, to the redevelopment of Moorgate Place.

By reason of expansion both in numbers and in activities the Institute outgrew its Hall. The Council originally planned to acquire certain adjoining freehold and other interests and to proceed with a development jointly with the owner of the freehold of the remaining adjacent building on the whole site. The first series of acquisitions was completed at a cost of just under £500,000. Early in 1965, however, the opportunity arose, and was taken, to acquire for £275,000 the freehold of the remaining adjacent building. Thus the Institute as owners of the freehold of the entire site could proceed independently. Your Council is satisfied that this last acquisition is very much in the long-term interest of the Institute in the expectation that, in due course, the Institute will have a freehold headquarters worthy of it and adequate for its requirements for many years to come.

I had hoped to be able to report that the Institute was free to proceed with the redevelopment but an obstacle has arisen, which could not be foreseen last year, namely, the need to obtain an Office Development Permit. The Institute's application for a permit has been submitted but cannot be formally considered by the appropriate authorities until the necessary legislation has been passed.

The redevelopment of this site does, of course, involve considerable sums of money and some £800,000 will have been spent by the end of 1965 on the purchase of freehold and other interests and on professional fees. This expenditure is to be financed partly from the Institute's own resources and partly by borrowing; further borrowing will be necessary to finance the demolition and construction. The Institute must therefore finance not only its many and increasing activities but also the interest charges on this borrowed money.

For these and other reasons as set out in paragraph 127 of the report, the Council has decided to place before members at a special meeting to be held on September 23rd, 1965, proposals for increases in subscriptions.

Increase in the Number of Council Members

Members will have noted from the report that the practice of co-option has been used increasingly in the past year in order to spread the burden of committee work.

Nevertheless, after reviewing the work of the Council and the expansion in its activities it is considered that the Council is now too small to deal with the volume of work. Proposals will accordingly be placed before members at the special meeting to be held on September 23rd, 1965, to increase the size of the Council.

Acknowledgements

I would like, on behalf of the Council, to thank the Secretary and his staff for their work over the past year during which they have not spared themselves in their endeavours to further the interests of our Institute and also I would like to thank them for their help to me personally.

MANAGEMENT CONSULTANCY ETHICS

THE statement on management consultancy contained in the proceedings of the May meeting of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales (reported on other pages in this issue) gives guidance to members on four main points of conduct. The first is that members may form or be connected with management consultancy firms and unlimited companies (and also limited companies if they are not in practice), provided that these concerns do not advertise or solicit for work. The second is that members should not be a partner or a director of a firm or company where the name indicates the nature of its business. An exception is made in the case of such concerns already in existence at May 5th, 1965.

The third point is that while members who wish to do so, and are eligible, may join the Institute of Management Consultants, they should not use the designatory letters of that body either after their names or on their note-paper heading. Fourthly, members associated with management consultancy businesses should not normally accept any conventional practice work from a client introduced to him by the client's own professional accountant. Members, also, should always write as a matter of etiquette to the client's professional accountant when asked through some other connection to undertake special work.

Doubtless the above precepts are already scrupulously observed by the great majority of members engaged in or connected with, through their firms, management consultancy. The line of demarcation between conventional professional work and what might be called commercial professional work is, however, sometimes difficult to define and the guidance of the Council will be much appreciated, particularly by younger members wishing to extend their activities yet anxious not to let their enthusiasm outrun their discretion.

FUTURE OF CAR INSURANCE RATES

ACCORDING to a report prepared by a firm of management consultants for the British Insurance Association, motor insurance premiums may have to be increased severely in the next few years unless collective measures are taken by the motor insurance companies and Lloyds' syndicates.

The report suggests that the total cost of motor claims in the United Kingdom based on trends over the last decade is likely to reach between £225 million and £255 million by 1970 compared with only £109 million in 1963. Total claims are at present rising more quickly than the number of vehicles on the road, traffic density or petrol consumption.

The consultants include among their recommendations that the basic rates of motor insurance should be held at present levels for as long as possible and that later increases should be kept to the minimum amount needed to maintain efficient operations. They say that compared with other countries with heavy motor density, motor insurance is still relatively cheap in Britain. Average premiums for United Kingdom motorists are considered to be among the lowest in any major country in the world and are considerably lower than those on the Continent or in North America.

The report says that motorists will inevitably have to pay more for their insurance cover over the next decade but it recommends that there should be a new approach to rating whereby expenses and claim costs are reduced to make sure that increases are as low as possible. A basic major recommendation is that in assessing premiums the emphasis should be on the driver rather than on the car. The present rating system, says the British Insurance Association, has been partly invalidated by the competitive operation of no-claim discounts. The report questions the equity of these discounts and analyses the consequences.

Internal Auditors entertain their International President

ON Tuesday, the London Chapter of The Institute of Internal Auditors gave a dinner in the King Charles Suite, Whitehall Court, in honour of the visiting International President of the Institute, Mr F. Arnold Beale and Mrs Beale, from Canada. Mr James H. Protheroe, A.A.C.C.A., A.I.M.T.A., President of the London Chapter, was in the chair, and those present included Governors and other officers of the London Chapter with their ladies, representatives of the accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom (see picture below), Mr N. J. Brown, Vice-President and Comptroller of the Steel Company of Canada (in which Mr Beale is the Director of Internal Audit) and Mrs Brown, Mr John Black, M.A., LL.B., C.A., C.I.MECH.E., and Mrs Black, Mr Arthur E. Webb, Editor, The Accountant, and Mrs Webb.

The toast of 'The Institute of Internal Auditors' was proposed by Mr Black and Mr Beale responded. The Chapter President welcomed the guests and Mr Robert Browning, C.B.E., M.A., LL.B., C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, replied. Mrs Beale charmingly responded to the toast of 'The Ladies' proposed by Mr Sydney S. Ross, a Governor of the London Chapter.

BANKS RESTRICT LOANS

AT the end of last week the Bank of England advised the London Clearing Banks that their loans should not increase by more than 5 per cent in the year ending March 1966. The only categories of customers to which the restriction is not to apply are nationalized industries and local authorities. The letter sent by the Governor to the Clearing Banks on May 5th, said that priority should be given to providing finance for exports 'and other activities contributing directly to their increase' and on this occasion there was no suggestion that priority should be given to manufacturing industry as a whole.

In the directive from the Bank last December on the same subject, the banks were asked to give priority to exports and to 'the productive investment programmes of manufacturing industry'. The omission of manufacturing industry on this occasion is a clear indication that in the Government's opinion the recent rapid increase in advances has owed a good deal to increased accommodation given to manufacturing industry and that this source of expansion must be brought under control for the time being.

This is My Life . . .

CHAPTER 276

'DROP in for a chat after lunch,' invited the deputy chairman cordially, 'I'd like to iron out a little problem.' This approach was unusual for him, his normal reaction to accountants being to treat them as 'totters of invoices', so I took the opportunity to check in advance bank interest rates and surtax procedures. Just in case.

However, he was most affable when I arrived, as also was his son, who lounged nonchalantly against the window. This rising young executive, I noticed, was guilty of a sartorial atrocity; he wore a maroon sweater, at the best of times an unlovely garment, with a dark-grey lounge-suit. In mentally writhing over this offending vision, I almost missed his father's opening gambit.

'Been thinking about our reconstruction job on that corner shop we bought,' said the deputy chairman. 'The two upper floors used to be self-contained offices . . . wonder if we could convert the top one into a residential flat, perhaps; be useful if any of our staff were working late . . . missed the last bus and so on.'

It seemed premature to point out that a taxi would be cheaper, so I looked thoughtful and said 'residential, eh?' in an interrogative tone. The D.C. demurred hastily. 'Well, strictly on a business basis for essential company work. I might spend a night or so there myself, perhaps, resting after a board meeting or, well, revising the blueprints of our premises extension project.' He'd bought a big country estate recently, be it noted; clearly the idea of having the company provide him with a luxury flat in town was proving attractive. 'Others could use it too, of course,' he added generously, but it would take a brave employee to ask for the overnight use of the deputy-chairman's personal penthouse. It was time to remind him firmly of the sceptical approach to benefits-in-kind displayed by the Income Tax Acts.

He listened carefully to an explanation of the tax angle of the provision of living accommodation in our premises if so required by the terms of his employment (which it obviously wasn't) or to enable him to do his work properly (which was even less reasonable). The Inspector of Taxes dealing with our affairs is humorously tolerant of human frailties and willing to compromise over minor matters, but I could imagine the searching questions as to actual occupation that I'd be called on to answer. Facts were facts. Schedule E was implacable. The D.C. cut in sharply when I tried to show how he differed from our bank manager, who lives above the bank offices. 'How about entertainment?' he asked. 'Couldn't the flat be used as a focal point for meeting clients or suppliers, for cocktail receptions and so forth? That way it would be allowable.' This urge to circumvent the new restrictions on entertainment expenses has become a phobia with more people than would care to admit it.

He was becoming rather aggressive at this stage, as if the thwarting of his scheme for a free apartment was my responsibility. Directors always have difficulty in comprehending why in the suspicious eyes of the Revenue Commissioners they should apparently rank with sellers of gold bricks to orphans rather than as champions of the working classes. But my professional pride rose up in arms to help him, rusty though I was in taxation wiles. I thumbed through my notes . . . Doyle v. Davidson . . . McKie v. Warner . . . suddenly inspiration sprang full-grown. Suppose we reorganized his son's job, requiring him specifically to live on the premises, this being necessary to perform his new and additional duties as house detective, stock-shortages investigator, chief security officer, etc., for, say, a two-year stretch? The D.C. hitched his chair forward, the maroon monstrosity heaved excitedly, as I spread out the Income Tax Acts on the desk.

I knew who'd use the flat in reality, irrespective of the well-planned window-dressing. My conscience, like Tennyson's horns of Elfland faintly blowing, was warning me of the wrath to come when the inspector should realize what mischief was afoot.

Managing for Results

by PETER F. DRUCKER. (William Heinemann Ltd, London. 25s.)

Mr Peter Drucker's previous book, The Practice of Management, has been essential reading for students and practitioners of management since it was published. His new book establishes an immediate claim to an equal degree of success through its originality, practicality and easy manner.

The introduction stresses that it is designed to be a 'what-to-do' book about business methods, all of which have been tried and proved. What has to be done is then moderately treated in three parts entitled, 'Understanding the business', 'Focus on opportunity', and 'Programme for performance'.

The first part establishes the theme of the whole book by examining the realities of business and then discussing how to carry out an analysis which will disclose whether a particular business is or is not in touch with reality. It is immediately obvious that Mr Drucker is completely non-sentimental about business and is entirely clear about the need to look ahead, recognize opportunities and throw in the resources of the business behind the best opportunities. He never suggests that every choice will be right, but his argument – and frequent fluent examples woven into the text – make it very clear that the business that follows his advice has more chance of backing the right opportunities than one that does not.

The first part of the book, dealing with basic business analysis, should be of particular interest to accountants. This identifies those 'result areas' within a business for which results can be measured, and then discusses the few but fundamental facts upon which an examination of each area can be based. Most of the facts are normal accounting data used, primarily, to show up good and bad product performance and prospects. The main innovation is the idea of a 'transaction' as the unit of cost. Mr Drucker says that there is no set answer to the question 'What is a transaction?', within a particular business context. A transaction might be an invoice or a shipment or each proposal that a computer manufacturer has to make to get a sale or a production run in a rolling mill etc. Once identified the transaction is used in the analysis as the cost unit within an added value convention. There is some woolliness about fixed costs, which Mr Drucker seems to want to see covered by absorption rather than contribution, but it does not detract from the basic simplicity of the argument.

Having analysed the financial data around products, non-financial analysis is done to distinguish today's bread-winners and tomorrow's bread-winners among the products from another eight suggested categories which may be worth while (e.g. productive specialties), or worth one more chance (e.g. repair jobs) or ripe for extinction (e.g. investments in managerial ego).

After this, cost structure must be examined, but with the emphasis on where do most of the costs go, rather than on which will be easiest to cut, as so often seems to happen with a traditional approach. Mr Drucker suggests strongly that unusual groups of costs are often worth the first blow with the meat axe. He puts money and physical movement of materials and goods at the top of his list. which is perhaps particularly relevant in Britain at the moment.

The business analysis in Part I of the book covers results, costs, marketing and knowledge; Part II deals with creating and selecting opportunities; and Part III deals with decision-making and performance. These subsequent parts are fascinating general reading. They are not as incisive as the first part, nor as obviously relevant to the accounting profession; but it is doubtful whether anyone who has allowed himself to be intrigued with the first part will be able to resist exploring the rest – and he will have his reward.

Time-span Handbook

by ELLIOTT JAQUES, M.A., M.D., PH.D. (Heinemann Educational Books Ltd, London. 21s net.)

In his introduction Dr Jaques says that 'the book is written primarily for those who wish to learn how to do time-span measurement'. But he goes on to say that 'it ought, however, to give a practical picture of the method to any interested persons who simply want to know about it'. There is no doubt that Dr Jaques has achieved both his objects.

Within the first seventy pages he describes the concept, defines the terms concerned – always a very necessary thing with any part of the Glacier Project – and describes the techniques of time-span measurement. This seeks to provide an objective measurement of degrees of responsibility and thus the basis for a logical and acceptable wage and salary scale. Dr Jaques emphasizes that time-span measurement is not the same as job specification. He also stresses that he speaks from practical experience of the effective use of this technique.

The whole of Part III of the book (about thirty pages is devoted to examples of time-span measurement. The index to these examples lists 113 jobs which Dr Jaques specifically discusses; these cover all types of accounting and office work as well as shop-floor and executive suite functions. It is shown that an impressive degree of accuracy can be obtained by questioning someone's immediate superior about the length of time during which a subordinate is left to use his own discretion as to sequence of quality of work. Much of the accuracy may be attributed to the use of a bracketing technique to which Dr Jaques has given the name of 'successive approximation'.

The last twelve pages of the book deal with the determination of equitable payment levels once the time-span measurement has been carried out. The general reader will probably find considerable interest in testing the salary levels within his own organization against the scales described in this section. Readers who have previously studied Dr Jaques's earlier book entitled Equitable Payments may still feel that they need to be convinced as to the validity of the scales, particularly where a basic United Kingdom scale is converted into an appropriate scale for use in another country. But it would seem that the working out of a few personal examples will quickly justify Dr Jaques's work.

Leaving aside the question of using time-span measurement within the accounting profession, it would certainly seem that the technique is something which accountants, whether in practice or in the employment of industry or commerce, should know about. The handbook enables them to acquire this knowledge extremely quickly and very clearly.

Competition for Consumers

by CHRISTINA FULOP. (André Deutsch Ltd, London. 30*s* net.)

Sponsored by the Institute of Economic Affairs, this study of the changing channels of retail distribution provides an up-to-date picture of the current situation. It also explains how and why the pattern of retail distribution has evolved and examines the various methods of retail distribution, assessing both their merits and demerits.

The book covers such diverse topics as consumer protection, shopping hours, and Resale Price Maintenance and the future of the small shopkeeper. For anyone active in the field of retail distribution, this book will prove informative.

Finance and Commerce

T.W.W.

THE accounts of T.W.W. Ltd, from which this week's reprint is taken, are in marked contrast to those of the Granada Group criticized in this column on April 3rd for their lack of information, particularly on the source of earnings in the various divisions of that organization. T.W.W. stands for Television Wales and West and the company is the commercial television programme contractor for Wales and an area in the West of England, boundaried approximately by Hereford, Swindon, Marlborough, Yeovil, Taunton and Bideford.

The T.W.W. profit and loss account shows clearly the sources of the group's income and, on the main television side, shows net advertising revenue and also the impact of the television levy. Of 'other income' the bulk comes from interests built up in the entertainments industry and elsewhere and Notes 1, 2 and 9 to the accounts show what they are. Note 10 also states the company's main trade investments.

A wholly-owned subsidiary company T.W.W. (Enterprises) holds all investments made by T.W.W. Ltd in activities other than television. The largest single investment of over £2 million is in Dollond & Aitchison, the opthalmic opticians, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary with the exception of the preference share capital.

Not Consolidated

The second principal subsidiary interest is in theatres in London's West End. Through a majority shareholding in the Donmar Group of companies, T.W.W. has interests in a number of successful productions. The Donmar Group owns 83 per cent of the share capital of the Piccadilly Theatre.

As will be seen from the Notes, Donmar is consolidated in the latest accounts but Dollond & Aitchison is not, because to have done so would have meant a delay in the presentation of group accounts. In the year prior to T.W.W.'s acquisition, Dollond & Aitchison's pre-tax profits were £233,000.

The T.W.W. profit and loss account is a much clearer statement than the balance sheet. In the latter, parent and group figures are placed to the right and comparative figures to the left of a single narrative, and to compare latest group figures with the previous year's the eye has to travel nine inches to the left across the page. And the eye is not used to reading right to left.

Total funds employed is the sum of half a dozen items but the total net assets figure is the sum of twenty-nine. Sub-totals in bolder type would have helped the presentation. Presenting parent and group figures to a single narrative is not an easy exercise and the T.W.W. accounts do not quite pull it off.

Heavy Spending

Meeting the requirements of extended television service involves T.W.W. in heavy capital commitments, and capital spending in 1965 is expected to be £300,000, which is even higher than the spending level in 1958 – the first year of the initial licence period. A new master control and an extra studio at Cardiff – the company operates studios there and in Bristol – is expected to be completed by midsummer. In Bristol, building work on an extra studio, facilities and offices is due for completion before the autumn.

In 1958, the first year of operation, the production of programmes in T.W.W. studios totalled 305 hours. Last year it was 528 hours and this year it is expected to be 610. In 1958 the total number of homes viewing the company's programmes was less than 200,000. Last January the number was 1,021,000.

Net advertising revenue, allowing for the levy in the past year, has virtually doubled since 1958 but final net earnings after tax for 1964 were only very marginally above the earnings level of 1959. Commercial television was once described as a licence to print money. T.W.W.'s profit graph suggests that the licence ran out in 1960.

Bi-lingual

T.W.W., incidentally, is the only bi-lingual commercial television company. The new licence granted to the company last July imposed new and heavier programme responsibilities. It required the company to operate two independent television services; one transmitting to the Welsh network with an extra Channel 7 in South Wales whilst continuing the service on Channel 10 for the same area of the West of England and South Wales served by T.W.W. for seven years.

This enables separate and concentrated attention to be given to Welsh programming. A concession was allowed in T.W.W.'s licence fee in respect of Welsh language programmes which can be transmitted only at a heavy loss. T.W.W. is the only independent television contractor required to run two separate services within a single area.

A full year of the television levy will make its impact on profits this year and Lord Derby, T.W.W.'s chairman, says 'there might be a reduction in profits for the next full year to an extent which it is impossible to forecast at this moment'. The position has not been made any easier by the ban on cigarette advertising, although in the past year only 7 per cent of income came from that source.

TWW LIMITED

Note 1

TWW Limited acquired control of the Ordinary share capital of Dolland and Aitchison Limited on 24th September, 1964. The last accounts of the D. & A. Group were made up to 4th April, 1964. Although accounts will be prepared for the period from 5th April, 1964 to 31st December, 1964, the Directors of TWW Limited have resolved not to consolidate the accounts of the Dolland and Aitchison Group with those of TWW in view of the delay which would result in their preparation. It is proposed to prepare such consolidated accounts for the year to 31st December, 1965 and to include the post-acquisition profits from 24th September, 1964 to 31st December, 1964.

Note 2

The two subsidiary companies, Donmar Productions Ltd. and Piccadilly Theatre Ltd. have prepared accounts for the 17 months from 1st August, 1963 to 31st December, 1964. D. & H. CITY NOTES

'CROSS currents in the stock-markets' and 'Few clear signposts for investors' were two City page headlines which appeared this week and they adequately sum up the present stock-market position.

A high level of industrial production probably until late this year suggests that 1965 company results should be reasonably good, but pressure on margins and on credit make it difficult to take an optimistic view beyond the end of the year.

Doubts about the forward position are keeping buyers out of the equity market and the assumption that Bank rate is going to stay at 7 per cent keeps money out of the gilt-edged market as well. The appearance of new corporation borrowing has hardly helped the latter section.

Present buyers of equities, it is held, must be prepared to take a two or three year view and that, itself, suggests that there may be better buying opportunities ahead. Capital gains tax considerations are also keeping stock-market volume down. Holders showing profits prefer not to take them and holders showing losses prefer not to cut them until they can offset the losses against profits. But since profits are not being taken the position is stalemate.

THERE must have been some wry smiles at the offices of the Building Societies Association on the receipt of the Governor of the Bank of England's letter urging that lending should not be increased by more than 5 per cent by next March. Lord Cromer has followed up his directive to the banks with similar advice to other financial organizations. The inclusion of the Building Societies Association in the Governor's 'round robin' comes at a time when the societies are finding themselves hard pressed to maintain last year's lending level, let alone raise it.

FOR members of the London Stock Exchange the most intriguing words in the Stock Exchange's 1964–65 report were that the Council is considering methods of increasing income other than solely by members' subscriptions. The Council's scheme will be put to members at the annual meeting next week.

There are suggestions that member firms may be subjected to some form of turnover tax or subscription. If that is so, those firms which resented having to supply the Stock Exchange Council with turnover figures will resent it all the more. That may be more so, since the figures of Stock Exchange turnover now seem to receive scant attention from those quarters which were strongest in their demand for the figures.

A CONSIDERABLY more efficiently administered insurance industry is gradually emerging from the unhappy underwriting experience of the past few years. Underwriting losses have made an overhaul of administration imperative. The Commercial Union Company, for example, reduced its staff last year by 1,800 by early retirement and 'natural wastage' and has brought in business consultants to run the rule over the company's claims and payments machinery. On a broader scale, the McKinsey report to the industry as a whole on motor insurance is another indication of concern with greater efficiency. This is likely to be the road insurance will travel rather than further mergers – despite the current running take-over battle between the Phoenix and London Assurance companies.

Management Consultancy

The Council approved the following statement for publication:

'The Council is aware that members offering management consultancy services are faced with ethical problems of a particularly difficult kind, and now issues for their guidance the following statement, which is applicable whether the business is carried on by a separate organization or as a department of a member's general practice:

(a) A member in practice may be a partner or director of a management consultancy firm or unlimited company provided that the firm or company does not advertise or solicit for work. He may write a personal letter or make a direct approach to another member of the profession in practice offering his firm's services: he should not however issue any circular.*

(b) A member not in practice may be a director or employee of any management consultancy company, whether limited or not, provided that the company does not advertise in the Press or otherwise, or solicit for business. In the case of companies carrying on a business of management consultancy before May 5th, 1965, a member not otherwise in practice may be a director or employee provided that the company does not advertise for business and continues not to undertake accountancy work other than for management services.

(c) A member in practice may form an unlimited company (but not a limited company) to carry out management consultancy work subject to the provisos listed in the Council statement on 'Activities through companies' (Section E8 of the Members' Handbook).

(d) A member should not be a partner or director of a firm or company whose name indicates that it carries on management consultancy work, except that this shall not apply to members presently partners or directors of firms or companies in existence on May 5th, 1965, carrying on business, under such a name, solely as management consultants who otherwise comply with the requirements of this statement.

(e) A member who is eligible to do so may join the Institute of Management Consultants. The proliferation of designatory letters after members' names on their practising notepaper is discouraged and it is regarded as preferable that members joining the Institute of Management Consultants should not use on their practising notepaper any designatory letters to which they may become entitled as a result of such membership.

(f) A member firm or unlimited company, whether its business is carried on as a separate entity or not, which is able to satisfy the conditions of entry may join the Management Consultants Association as a member or affiliated member, provided that the firm or unlimited company complies with the Institute's ethical requirements in all respects.

(g) A member of a firm or unlimited company which undertakes management consultancy work should not normally accept, nor should a partner in any firm in which he is a partner accept, auditing, taxation or other conventional accountancy work from any client introduced to him for management consultancy services by the client's own professional accountant.

(h) In the event of an introduction for management consultancy work other than through the existing professional accountant the member should communicate as a matter of professional courtesy with the existing professional accountant or consultant informing him of the special work he has been asked to undertake.'

*Guidance on the use of booklets is given in the Council statement, paragraphs 57–70 of section E3 of the Members' Handbook (reproduced in Accountancy, December 1964, pages 1095–6).

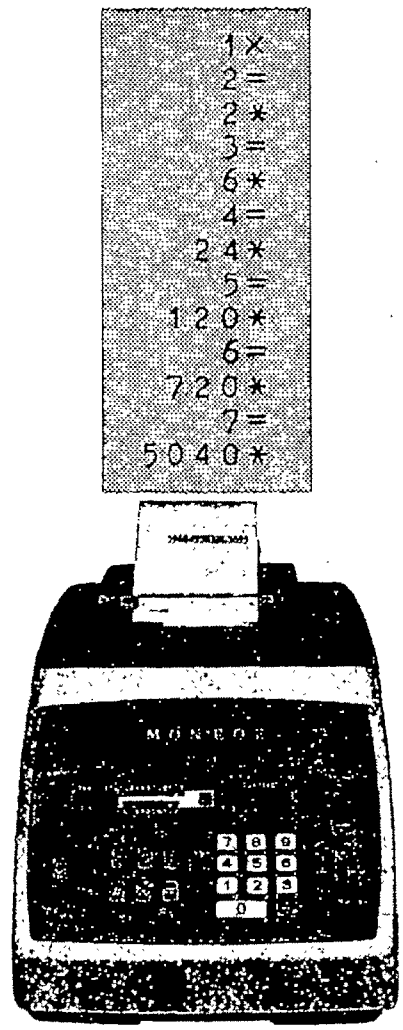
FINDING AND DECISION OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE



Finding and Decision of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at a hearing held on April 7th, 1965.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that John Andrew Levay, a Fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts and defaults within the meaning of Clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that (a) despite repeated requests made to him by a firm of solicitors on behalf of a client he failed within a reasonable time or at all to deal with outstanding matters relating to the tax affairs of the said client (b) failed to take any action in response to two letters dated November 6th, 1964, and January 11th, 1965, addressed to him by an Under-Secretary of the Institute so as to render himself liable to exclusion or suspension from membership of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Mr John Andrew Levay, F.C.A., had been proved under both headings and the Committee ordered that Mr John Andrew Levay, F.C.A., c/o Messrs Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co, 128 Queen Victoria Street, London EC4, be suspended from membership of the Institute for a period of two years.

"237 salaries– all paid on one cheque"

Credit Transfers have saved us I-don't-know-how-many clerical man-hours over the last year alone. Particularly on the salaries side—one cheque, instead of 237. Everyone is delighted—most of all our accounts department who, much to their satisfaction, now find themselves able to get away home on the dot each day.

How Credit Transfers can help you pay the salaries

Your accounts department makes out a Credit Transfer slip payable to each salaried staff member through his or her bank. These are listed and totalled, and one cheque is made out. You then send this one cheque, with the list and the Credit Transfers, to your own bank—who will then do the rest by sending out the various Credit Transfers to the banks concerned. If your weekly-paid staff accepts wages through the bank, then of course the same principle—and benefit—applies.

Extracts from the Report of the Council for the year ended December 31st, 1964, to be presented at the forty-sixth annual general meeting of the Institute to be held on Friday, May 21st, 1965, at The Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London WC2.

Membership

During the year, 693 persons were admitted to membership and after allowing for resignations, lapsed memberships and deaths, the total membership at December 31st, 1964, was 9,128, showing a net increase of 629 over the previous year.

Registered Students

During the year, there were 4,629 new student registrations, and after allowing for transfers to membership, resignations, lapsed registrations and deaths, there were 18,849 names on the students' register at December 31st, 1964, as compared with 18,361 at the end of 1963.

Honours, Awards and Appointments

In the New Year's Honours List, Mr John Norman Toothill, C.B.E., F.C.W.A., was created a Knight Bachelor.

Mr S. J. Truman, F.C.W.A., was appointed a Member of the Order of the British Empire.

Mr R. D. Muldoon, M.P., F.C.W.A., F.P.A.N.Z., was appointed Parliamentary Under-Secretary to the Minister of Finance, New Zealand, with special responsibility for the introduction of decimal currency.

Mr W. Coutts Donald, C.A., F.C.W.A., was appointed to the National Economic Development Council.

Mr F. S. Somekh, F.C.W.A., F.A.C.C.A., was re-elected President of the Association of Certified Public Accountants in Israel.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

In an announcement by the Council, dated January 22nd, 1964, members were informed that the Councils of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants had agreed, subject to the approval of their members, to establish a joint post-qualification diploma in management accounting services. The terms of the announcement were reproduced in the Report of the Council for 1963.

With a letter dated April 21st, 1964, the President sent to every member a copy of a booklet entitled Scheme for a Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, giving full details of the proposed scheme. Members' attention was drawn particularly to the provision whereby the joint board is required to award diplomas to those Fellows of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants who have passed the Institute's Examination in Management Accountancy, with the effect that any Fellow who passed that examination during the time that it was held (i.e. December 1953 to June 1963) will be entitled to the award of the joint diploma without further examination or further proof of practical experience.

At an extraordinary general meeting of members held in Belfast in June, special resolutions were passed adopting alterations to the Institute's Memorandum and Articles of Association necessary for the Institute's participation in the scheme, and approving the scheme itself. It has now been approved by all the bodies referred to above, with the exception of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, which, because of certain legislative procedures, is not yet in a position to participate. It is accordingly planned to proceed with the scheme on a four-body basis until the Irish Institute is able to join. This will necessitate the addition of a paragraph to the printed scheme, which is the subject of a resolution to be put to members in extraordinary general meeting on May 21st, 1965. Under the provisions of the scheme, the membership of the joint board is to be twelve, in the following proportions:

The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, four;
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, four;
The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, two;
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, one;
The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, one;

but until the Irish Institute can participate, there will be eleven members only.

During the year, a joint committee representing the five bodies has made considerable progress with administrative and other arrangements for the scheme, pending the establishment of the joint board itself.

Examinations

The examinations on the new five-part syllabus were held for the first time in June.

The Council accepted with gratitude the endowment of a new Institute Examination Prize by Mr W. B. Flowers, F.C.W.A., of Johannesburg. The prize is awarded to the successful candidate at each examination submitting the best papers in Financial Accountancy (Part III).

The June and December examinations were held at thirty-two home and seventy-eight overseas centres. A total of 13,464 candidates sat, including 2,710 overseas.

The comparative figures for the past six years are as follows:

1959 ..	10,603	1962 ..	12,672
1960 ..	10,797	1963 ..	14,078
1961 ..	11,346	1964 ..	13,464

Institute Research Award

Under the scheme which was announced in 1963, six entries were received for the Institute's Research Award Scheme, which was promoted by the Council with the object of encouraging individual research into important aspects of cost and management accountancy.

The prize of 100 guineas was awarded to Mr C. B. Edwards, B.A. (HONS.), A.C.W.A., for a treatise on 'Capital budgeting'. This will eventually be published in full in book form; preparations are also being made to publish a shortened version as an Institute Occasional Paper.

Research and Technical Activities

Work continued during the year on the revision of The Terminology of Cost Accountancy and the Presentation of Information to Management.

Final drafting of The Profitable Use of Capital in Industry was completed, and arrangements were made for publication early in 1965.

A meeting of Branch Research Officers was held at Leamington in May, and a number of Branch Research Groups continued to work on projects of their own choice, the results of which are expected to be seen during 1965.

Members of the Research and Technical Committee gave a considerable amount of time to advisory work in connection with conferences organized by the branches, and represented the Institute at discussions on technical matters affecting the work of other professional and industrial organizations.

During the year the Technical Officer, Mr M. C. Cook, B.A.(COM.), A.C.W.A., resigned his appointment to take up an overseas post. Mr D. Garbutt, A.C.W.A., agreed to carry out some of the Technical Officer's duties on a part-time basis.

Branch Activities

Stimulated by new thought and interesting developments in the techniques of the profession as well as rapid technological progress in the manufacturing and processing industries, members' activities in branches, sub-branches and overseas centres were again at a high level. Lectures, discussions, film shows and organized visits to industrial units continue to be the principal means by which postgraduate knowledge and information is exchanged. Assistance and advice are always available from head office on new approaches to branch activities.

A very successful conference of branch secretaries attending the National Cost Accounting Conference was held in Belfast. The interchange of experiences was most valuable to all who attended.

Co-ordinating committees, consisting of representatives of branches and sub-branches, conveniently grouped in each of the major industrial areas, held a number of meetings during the year to arrange conferences and courses, and to discuss other matters of common interest.

Council and Committees

Five meetings of the Council, five meetings of the Executive Committee and ninety-three meetings of other committees and sub-committees were held during the year.

Review of Institute Policy

In accordance with instructions issued by the Council, work was continued throughout the year by all Committees concerned with the development of the profession. A comprehensive review of all aspects of the Institute's work and policy is in progress. Particular attention is being given to policy, organization and method, for ensuring steady growth of research and educational programmes.

Due to Mr W. L. Spalding's election as a Vice-President at the annual general meeting, a postal ballot was held to fill the vacant seat on the Council, as a result of which Mr A. W. Field was elected.

Benevolent Fund

During the year, thirty-four deaths of members were recorded. Letters of condolence were sent to the relatives of the deceased members on behalf of the Council. Inquiries were made into every instance where assistance or advice seemed to be required, or where the dependant's circumstances appeared to be such that financial aid might become necessary.

One beneficiary who had received assistance for the past ten years, an elderly widow living in Canada, died during the year. Another beneficiary, a widow with a young family, who had received assistance for three years, has married again.

Aid was given during the year to six widows of former members and to three members suffering hardship through disability. Christmas parcels were sent to a number of widows with young families. The total disbursed from the Fund during the year was £955.

Members who do not already contribute to the Fund are invited to consider doing so. A modest annual donation, made under a deed of covenant (which is not binding on executors of wills) yields a helpful sum when income tax has been reclaimed. The present resources of the Benevolent Fund are fortunately adequate for present needs but would not be enough to sustain prolonged aid in less prosperous days.

MAINLY FOR STUDENTS

TAXATION ACCOUNT PROBLEMS

This article is based on existing legislation pertinent to students' studies. With the eventual introduction of corporation tax, subject to the passing of the Finance Bill, the procedure outlined will be different and will be dealt with in these columns in due course.

NOT the least of the difficulties which arise from the United Kingdom's present system of income taxation occurs in connection with the taxation account in the impersonal ledger. This article attempts to describe the information which such an account must disclose and the adjustments frequently necessary before it can be balanced off and the appropriate transfer made to the profit and loss account. The actual payments of tax represented by cheques in the cash-book do not present any difficulty. Complications arise in connection with tax deducted from interest paid and received, the discharge of tax liabilities by means of tax reserve certificates and differences between opening provisions based on estimates and their subsequent discharge at the agreed figures. The fact that good accounting practice calls for the setting aside to reserve of the estimated income tax liability on the profits of the accounting period is also a source of difficulty. This practice means that at the balance sheet date there are normally two credit balances which represent unpaid income tax as follows:

(i) Any liability for the income tax year of assessment in which the date of the balance sheet falls. This amount is described in the balance sheet as 'Current Taxation' and is included among current liabilities.

(ii) The whole of the estimated liability which will arise for the future year of assessment based upon the profits of the accounting period. This amount is described in the balance sheet as 'Future Income Tax' and is shown as a separate item.

What the Account must Show

The purpose of the account is to show separately the amount to be charged against the accounting period's profits for (1) United Kingdom income tax (normally based upon the trading profit) and (2) Profits tax for the chargeable accounting period covered by the accounts. If the company has paid any overseas taxation and has, in consequence, been granted relief from United Kingdom income tax, the amount of such relief must be included with the charge for United Kingdom income tax. When the taxation liabilities have been ascertained from the computations, the amounts must be carried down as credit balances on the taxation account in order to arrive at the correct charge to profit and loss account for income tax and profits tax respectively.

If the company has paid annual interest under deduction of tax, only the net amount will be shown in the cash-book and posted to Interest Account. In order to arrive at the true figure of interest, it is necessary to debit Interest Account with the tax deducted, thus bringing the charge to its gross amount. In order to complete the double entry, the tax deducted is credited to Taxation Account as representing a recovery from the payee of a part of the company's taxation liability.

Corresponding adjustments must be made for income tax deducted at source from interest which the company receives. This represents tax borne by the company additional to that which arises on its Schedule D assessment.

Tax Reserve Certificates

Many companies purchase Tax Reserve Certificates as a means of earmarking the funds necessary to discharge a subsequent taxation liability. This form of Government security now bears a tax-free interest rate of 3½ per cent for a maximum period of two years, providing the Tax Reserve Certificates are used in satisfaction of a taxation liability and are not surrendered for cash. When a tax liability is discharged in this manner, the following journal entry must be passed:

Taxation Account	Dr
To Tax Reserve Certificates.
Interest on Tax Reserve Certificates

Being surrender of Tax Reserve Certificates of face value £... in discharge of taxation liability of £... for 196—6–.

The interest received on what is, in effect, a special type of investment is thus accounted for separately and is not treated as reducing the taxation payable.

Adjustments on Previous Years

When annual accounts are prepared, it is necessary to estimate the taxation liabilities in accordance with draft computations, because these cannot be submitted to H.M. Inspector of Taxes until the audit is completed and the accounts and balance sheet adopted by the company. It may, therefore, happen that the liabilities finally agreed differ from those in the books and if this is the case the under- or over-provisions must be adjusted in the succeeding year's accounts. If material, the amount of these differences must be disclosed separately, they must not be merged with the charge for the later year. They should preferably be shown as adjustments to the balance of profit and loss account brought forward, thus restoring it to the figure at which it would have stood had the liabilities been correctly computed when the previous year's accounts were prepared.

AN EXAMPLE

A company trading in England makes up its accounts annually to December 31st. At the end of 1962 the following amounts were outstanding:

Income tax (Schedule D) for 1963–64 (estimated)	12,000
Income tax (Schedule D) for 1962–63 (agreed)	10,000
Profits tax for 1962 (estimated)	7,400

The company owned £7,500 of Tax Reserve Certificates. During 1963 the following relevant transactions took place:

January 28th. The Tax Reserve Certificates were surrendered in part discharged of the income tax liability for 1962–63, interest of £150 being allowed. The balance was paid by cash.

May 31st. Profits tax 1962 was paid at the agreed figure of £7,740. The Schedule D liability for 1963–64 was agreed at £11,500.

June 30th. One half-year's interest less tax was paid on the £48,000 6 per cent Debenture Stock for the half-year to date. Mortgage interest of £400 less tax was received.

September 30th. A dividend of £1,225 net was received from a trade investment.

December 31st. One half-year's interest on the Debenture Stock was paid as above. Mortgage interest of £400 less tax was received.

When the 1963 accounts were prepared the draft taxation computations disclosed the following liabilities.

Income tax (Schedule D) for 1964–65	14,250
Profits tax	8,200

The entries in the books for 1963 would be as follows:

	Future income tax carried down:
	1964–65	14,250

Notes.

(i) Profits Tax 1962. The opening provision fell short of the agreed liability by £340. This must not be allowed to affect the charge in the 1963 accounts but must be adjusted by deduction from the balance of the profit and loss account as at January 1st, 1963.

(ii) Similar remarks apply to the Schedule D liability for 1963–64 estimated, when the 1962 accounts were prepared, at £12,000, but subsequently agreed at £11,500 at which figure it must be carried down. The over-provision of £500 will be added to the opening profit and loss account balance. Usually, however, only the net adjustment for taxation, viz. £160, would be disclosed.

(iii) The effect of clearing the opening provisions is to confine the charge to the 1963 profit and loss account to the tax liabilities on those profits, adjusted, in the case of income tax, by tax suffered or recouped by deduction at source. The 1963 charge is made up as follows:

Income tax:	£
Schedule D 1964–65	14,250
Tax suffered by deduction:
Mortgage interest	310
Dividend received	775
	15,335
Less Tax recouped from debenture interest	1,116
Income tax on the profits of 1963	£14,219
Profits tax:
1963 assessment	£8,200

(iv) As dividends to shareholders are shown in the profit and appropriation account at their net figures no adjustment is made in the taxation account for the income tax deducted.

ON PASSING EXAMINATIONS

IT always seems a little patronizing and even presumptuous to advise a student, whom one does not know, how to pass an examination. In matters of approach most students seem to be either uninterested or unimpressed.

It is nevertheless a subject worthy of study in itself. The passing of an examination is not merely a matter of accumulating sufficient knowledge in each subject in the syllabus. In the first place it is impossible to know everything. In the second place as many students will have found to date, in various examinations they may have sat, the one considered the brightest is often the one that fails.

There are two aspects to be considered – the technique of examinations generally and the particular task being attempted.

Taking the general case, the primary point to bear in mind is that if the student has done the work the syllabus requires and has an average intelligence, the odds are probably in favour of success. However, there are other factors that must qualify this statement.

There is the phenomenon known as 'examination nerves'. A common complaint, it will begin perhaps a little while before the appointed day and reach its climax when the pen is just applied to the paper – with a shaking hand. But there is consolation in the fact that this happens to most students.

Matter of Temperament

What can be done about it? No amount of talk will help. It is a matter of temperament and it is best to accept it as perfectly normal. The candidate should try to relax as much as possible before the examination; and this applies not only to the journey to the ordeal itself. Late night cramming during the final week will very often do as much or more harm as good – particularly for those unaccustomed to late hours. Again, when it comes to the night preceding the examination, a good night's sleep is the best form of study. On the day itself things should not be left to the last minute, nor one's arrival timed too soon. It is a good idea to walk a reasonable distance to the place. One should try to behave in as relaxed a manner as possible and, if it can be managed, to eat a good breakfast.

When it comes to the actual answering of the papers there are certain imperatives. The first is to read each question carefully. Secondly, in subjects which require a written answer then (except in literary subjects with which we are not here concerned) tabulate as often as possible; for there is no doubt that tabulations are a help to the examiner. They are in keeping with the general rule which should be written large in every examination hall – 'Be as brief as the question allows.'

If an essay is required, then write short sentences and let each deal with one point only. Short sentences lead to short answers and provided the material is relevant and the principal points for which the examiner is seeking are contained therein, he cannot avoid giving a good mark. Candidates should write what they know and leave it at that. It is easy in a ten-mark question to earn nine marks in the first paragraph and lose eight of them in the next. It is nothing but irritating to the man marking the paper if it contains long, rambling answers.

Another matter often spoken of but so rarely heeded is that the first 50 per cent of the marks are the easiest to obtain. For this reason alone it is essential to attempt all questions – if necessary leaving some of the easier ones unfinished. There is little point in wasting time trying for the extra one mark on question A when one could be earning five marks on question B.

Time is precious. Candidates are usually advised to allocate the time available among the questions in proportion to the marks. There is little point in doing this unless they follow this advice. Never be afraid of leaving a question unfinished and moving on to the next. If it is a question on a subject the candidate fancies he knows then the odds are that he has already earned most of the marks that he can. If, on the other hand, it is a question that baffles, then he is wasting time, temper and nervous energy in carrying on with it. Leave it and come back to it later if time allows. By continuing to struggle one is almost certainly losing marks with every passing minute. This applies particularly to accounts questions. Candidates do well to remember the examiner is looking for basic comprehension of principles, not the precision of an adding machine. If an account does not balance, yet one is confident one has worked on the correct premises – forget it. It is possibly one arithmetical error costing one out of twenty marks.

When tackling a paper read the preliminary instructions carefully – they are not put in to fill a space. Then read briefly right through the paper – do not stop at the first question that appears within one's ability. A mark should be put against those questions which one feels most competent to tackle. Begin with these. If one's assessment was correct, one may find not only a surge of confidence but that one is ahead of time.

Danger of Ambiguity

One word of warning with reference to law papers. Precision and the correct use of language is very important. It is here that brevity is most relevant – and any ambiguity so dangerous. It is better, where the quoting of cases is concerned, to forbear to quote rather than write the wrong name. If it is a matter of describing a case the name of which cannot be recalled, do not hesitate to put X v. Y. It is unlikely to lose marks provided the facts are correct.

In the case of accounts questions, one will have had much first-hand experience in setting out many of the answers. The candidate should proceed slowly but surely lest, in attempting to establish a new European record, he makes a simple but annoying mistake in the beginning which has the effect of confusing and complicating the working out of the problem and forcing him to use time he can ill afford. One should try to be as neat as time allows and if asked to show workings, be sure that they are identifiable with the problem worked.

Lastly, candidates should remember that they are probably little different in ability from 90 per cent of the others in the examination room. If the paper seems difficult, the others are probably finding it so, too. Examinations are not set to identify genius, but to discover men who may make competent accountants. Assuming one has taken one's training seriously and has completed and understood the course of study why doubt one's ability to pass? – others, possibly far less intelligent, have done so. And if one does fail this is no disgrace. Men vary in type – some of the finest are slow starters; and after all, as Confucius remarked 'the greater glory belongs not to he that never fails but to he who falls and rises again'.

NEW COINAGE INTRODUCED IN SOUTH AFRICA

THE first of South Africa's new coins were introduced this week. The coins are a 2-cent piece, which is a denomination new to the coinage, and a completely different 5-cent piece of alloy which supersedes the present 5-cent coin (the former sixpence). It is expected that the remaining alloy coins – a 10-cent piece, a 20-cent piece, a 50-cent piece and a R1 piece – will be introduced at intervals of approximately three months. A new 1-cent piece, which is to be much smaller than the present ½-cent coin, is also to be struck.

The new coins are all much reduced in size and weight; so much so that one will be able to carry in one's pockets without discomfort three times as much in value as the present coins. An additional advantage that the new alloy coins will possess is that they will not discolour.

The new coins have been designed to give a clean-cut appearance with a minimum of wording. To this end, words are not duplicated in the two official languages of the Republic but instead equal numbers of coins bearing English and Afrikaans wording, respectively, will always be minted. Each coin has the head in profile of Van Riebeeck on the reverse side with the date of minting, and the words 'South Africa' or 'Suid Afrika' on alternate pieces. On the obverse side, the 5-cent coin bears a depiction of a crane while the 2-cent piece shows a wildebeest. The other alloy coins will depict different flora or fauna indigenous to South Africa.

The Coinage Advisory Board launched a highly-organized publicity campaign to precede the introduction of the two new coins this week. The radio, newspapers and schools were all called on to assist in the campaign. The new coinage is the result of a deal of detailed study and research into the Western currencies, made over the last three years or more. It will have several features which are unique in many ways. It is anticipated that the introduction of the new series will create no greater difficulties than were encountered with the change-over to a decimalized currency in 1961.

The conference, which is in place of the Institute's annual national cost accounting conference, will include sessions for group discussion on 'Return on capital employed', 'Capital investment appraisal', 'Financial planning and budgeting', 'Capital expenditure control', and 'Control of working capital'. Each of these topics will also be discussed in plenary sessions.

MANCHESTER SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Annual Report

The eighty-fourth annual report of the Manchester Society of Chartered Accountants for the year ended December 31st, 1964, shows that there was an increase in membership during the year of 690 bringing the total to 2,550. This substantial increase is mainly accounted for by the Institute's arrangement whereby members may join a district society without payment of a separate subscription. Despite this there are, the report states, still approximately 350 potential members in the area who have not yet joined the Society and the Committee would welcome efforts on the part of members to increase the membership still further by making personal contact with these potential members.

The monthly luncheon meetings, which have been a successful feature of the Society's activities in past years, are becoming increasingly popular and a number of interesting talks were given by guest speakers. In contrast, the low attendance at the Society's evening meetings held during the previous year resulted in the decision to limit the evening meetings for the 1964–65 session. One meeting was organized by the Manchester and District Branch of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; the other was a joint one with H.M. Inspectors of Taxes and took the form of a 'hot-pot' supper, after which a 'Mock appeal' was presented. The Society's discussion group, which now numbers fifty, held regular meetings throughout the year at which subjects included, 'Interpretation of accounts for stock exchange purposes', 'The auditor and the computer', and 'The report on The Practitioner Inquiry'.

Social functions included the annual dinner, attended by 430 members and guests, and an informal sherry party held in October to which all local Finalists at the November 1963 and May 1964 examinations were invited. The response, however, the report states, was disappointing.

The North Lancashire Branch of the Society increased its membership during the year to 646, and the application of the Branch to become a separate district society has been favourably received by the Institute and elevation to district society level has been offered to the Branch. Membership of the Society's Bolton Branch also increased during the year and now stands at 123.

BEDS, BUCKS AND HERTS CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Annual Report

The report of the Committee of the Beds, Bucks and Herts Branch of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants shows that at March 31st, 1965, membership totalled 482 compared with 444 in the previous year.

Branch activities during the year included a meeting with H.M. Inspectors of Taxes at Dunstable in May when a forum of Inspectors of Taxes answered questions put by members, and two luncheon meetings at Watford and Bedford. The Branch annual dinner took place at Dunstable in January, when the principal guests included the President of the Luton, Dunstable and District Chamber of Commerce and the Mayors of Luton and Dunstable.

On the subject of discussion groups, the report states that resulting from increased membership these have now been reorganized into three groups (a) practitioners' group – Luton and Stevenage; (b) industrial/commercial group – various centres; (c) general group – Watford. Although the first two groups discuss specialized subjects, the report emphasizes that members interested in a subject under discussion may attend any of the above group meetings. On education, training and recruitment, the report mentions that following negotiations with the Luton College of Technology, a two weeks' intensive course was held in October and was attended by twenty-seven prospective articled clerks.

INVESTMENT CONFERENCE

A conference on investment, organized under the auspices of the Investors Chronicle is to be held at The Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London WC2, on May 28th.

The conference, which will have as its theme 'The private investor', will be of particular topical interest having regard to the many aspects of the problems which are facing investors at the present time. The opening address will be given by Lord Robbins, C.B., B.SC.(ECON.), M.A., D.LITT., L.H.D., F.B.A., and other speakers and subjects will be 'How important is the private investor?', by the Rt Hon. Edward du Cann, P.C., M.P., and Mr Harold Lever, M.P.; 'How stockbrokers serve the private investor', by Mr R. W. Gordon, M.C., a member of the Council of the Stock Exchange; 'Is the National Savings Movement out of date?', by Mr Maurice Macmillan, chairman of the executive, Wider Share Ownership Council, and 'Are unit and investment trusts catering for the right public', by Mr Harold Wincott, C.B.E., editor-in-chief, Investors Chronicle. In addition to these speakers, representatives engaged in the spheres to be discussed at the conference will be on the platform to take part in the sessions.

The organizing secretary is Mr Philip Syrett, Angel Court Consultants Ltd, 4 Angel Court, London EC2, to whom all applications for tickets should be addressed.

COURSES FOR MANAGEMENT

A one-day conference on 'Purposeful investment for pension funds' is to take place in London on May 26th. The conference, which is to be conducted by Mr William G. Nursaw, F.C.I.S., A.C.I.I., F.I.ARB., has been planned to enable those attending to take part in the proceedings so that maximum benefit can be obtained both through the addresses given and the interchange of experience. Subjects to be dealt with will include, 'The investment scene after the Budget', 'Tasks for the pension fund manager' and 'Opportunities for improving the yield and the fund'.

Two one-day courses, 'Discount the cash flow' and 'How to improve your return on capital employed', are also to take place in London – on May 28th and June 24th respectively. The first course will set out to explain the principal techniques for evaluating capital projects and will include numerous worked examples and illustrations. The second course is designed to provide a logical step-by-step programme for raising the return on capital employed.

Further particulars regarding both the conference and the courses are obtainable from Dr James M. S. Risk, B.COM., PH.D., C.A., F.C.I.S., F.C.W.A., F.B.I.M., Albany Courtyard, Piccadilly, London W1.

What weight does your present Pension Scheme give to growth investment

Enough?

The percentage of younger people in the population —and therefore in employment—is increasing. This tends to unbalance the usual pension scheme with its bias towards considerations of present wages and salaries.

But a privately administered pension plan can make the all-important provision for investment growth to meet future demands. This is one of the ways in which we plan at Chase Manhattan. Today's pension plan investment is wisely weighted on the basis of future needs.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent, consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

From project to product

Merchant banking, as practised by Kleinwort, Benson, moves with the times. Facilities are expanded and new services introduced to meet the changing financial needs of modern industry and commerce.

The methods of financing a new product through the development and tooling-up stages, and of providing continuing credit to match the flow of goods, are familiar to Kleinwort, Benson experts—as are the problems of export, and the many special facilities available. It is a sound principle to talk over major financial problems with Kleinwort, Benson.

Underwriting History

Like many other famous people William Pitt entrusted his insurance affairs to the care of the Sun Insurance Office. For more than two and a half centuries the Sun has made its own contribution to the country's commercial history. Today both private persons and well-known companies still turn to the Sun for protection against loss and for expert advice on all insurances.

Baa, Baa, black sheep Have you any wool?

On your behalf we have experimented with all the new range of materials available to the modern tailor but have come to the conclusion that for men's suits there is nothing to compare with pure wool.

Yes sir, yes sir, Three bags full

We have secured from the best woollen mills in the country a new range of fine worsteds – considered ideal for town suits and we are able to make you, as last year, a two-piece suit for 38 guineas. Either of our shops would be delighted to show you these fine cloths.

The Economy's Two Worlds

A PERTURBING feature of recent financial developments in the domestic economy has been its apparent division into two worlds. While the private sector is being increasingly subjected to restraint, almost the reverse seems to be true of the public sector. It seems to have been overlooked that Government revenue has risen to some £8,500 million, to which must be added nearly another £2,500 million in respect of local authority expenditure. An interesting commentary on one aspect of the situation is provided by some statistics recently compiled by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants relating to the lending activities of local authorities.

A sample survey reveals that only a small number of authorities have actually suspended advances for home loans, although some have taken steps to restrict either the amount of individual advances or their number. The I.M.T.A. comments that there has been 'a marked upsurge of applications for loans in the past few months'. There seems to have been a corresponding increase in the number of loans granted and an even more marked increase in the total advances approved. The I.M.T.A. report adds that higher interest rates appear so far to have had only 'an insignificant effect on capital expenditure'.

Similarly, it appears that few authorities have reported that any capital schemes have been deferred. While it is no doubt true that 'most authorities regard their current capital programmes as necessary commitments which cannot be deferred on the grounds of current high interest', many borrowers in the private sector could no doubt make the same claim. In their case, however, the Bank of England is obviously determined that the commercial banks shall impose restraints.

The persistent inflationary tendencies evident throughout the economy, which the Government is now seeking to restrain, can just as effectively be eliminated by restraint within the public sector as in the private sector. Yet, while the Budget sought to restrain private spending, it did not apparently seem inconsistent to the CHANCELLOR that 'below-the-line' borrowing this year should be increased by another £350 million.

Likewise, just as Mr BROWN appears to believe that all price increases in the nationalized industries are fully justified, while those elsewhere in the private sector are less justifiable, so it would seem that Mr CALLAGHAN is of the opinion that every £ spent in the public sector yields a higher return than that in the private sector. It would be interesting to learn upon what evidence such beliefs are based.

CORPORATION TAX

Computing Profits – II

THE prohibition which clause 49 (5) (b) of the Finance Bill imposes on the deduction of 'interest' in computing income for corporation tax purposes is subject to an exception in favour of yearly interest paid on an advance by a bona fide bank in the United Kingdom. This is one of the provisions of clause 50 (3) which goes on, perhaps unnecessarily, to prohibit the deduction of interest which section 138 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, allows in Cases I and II computations, i.e. where the interest is paid overseas to a non-resident.

Having imported income tax rules into the computation of 'income' for corporation tax purposes, clause 49 goes on to provide expressly for carrying into the computation the provisions of the Income Tax Acts, conferring exemptions. Those Acts direct that in certain specified circumstances a person is to be charged to income tax on a particular amount even though it is not income in the ordinary sense.

Clause 49 (6) also makes it clear that these provisions are to apply to computations of income for corporation tax purposes. Clause 49 (6) is to apply, however, only 'so far as is consistent with' Part IV of the Bill. The precise scope of clause 49 (6) can therefore be ascertained only by close study of the other forty-one clauses of Part IV, not to mention Schedules 13 to 18 inclusive.

Before proceeding to clause 50, it is convenient to mention that some further elaboration is made later in the Bill to the general requirement that income tax law is to apply to the computation of income for corporation tax purposes. Clause 59 (4) provides inter alia that Part I of Schedule 14 to the Bill is to have effect for the purpose of applying the Income Tax Acts to corporation tax or for adapting those Acts to that tax. This is 'without prejudice to the general application to corporation tax of the Income Tax Acts relating to the computation of income'. Paragraph 1 of Schedule 14 provides somewhat unnecessarily that in section 125 (2) of the Income Tax Act, 1952 (which provides for the giving of notice of election to be charged on computed profits from woodlands), references to the year of assessment are to be read as references to the accounting period. Thus the election has to be made within two years after the first accounting period to which it relates. There are provisions elsewhere in the Bill for preserving the effect of elections already made for income tax. Paragraph 1 does emphasize that a company occupying woodlands can still get away with tax on an arbitrary annual value.

The second paragraph of Schedule 14 is also of questionable necessity. It says that section 202 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, shall have effect for the purposes of corporation tax. This section provides that the issue of funding bonds for the payment of interest (and not the redemption of the bonds) is to be treated for tax purposes as the payment of the interest.

Paragraph 3 of Schedule 14 extends the scope, for corporation tax purposes, of section 203 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. This section is an attack on bond-washing, where the taxpayer sells securities cum-dividend and buys them back ex-dividend. It is aimed mainly at surtax avoidance, but it provides that where the interest may be payable without deduction of standard rate tax, the bond washer may be charged to tax at the standard rate, under Case VI of Schedule D. Paragraph 3 of Schedule 14 directs that this Case VI liability is to apply whether or not the securities are of such a character that the interest may be paid without deduction. Paragraph 3 makes a similar modification to section 416 (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which deals with another method of bond-washing, namely, the sale of the right to interest. The remainder of Part I of Schedule 14 deals with more specialized matters.

We return now to clause 50, the rubric of which says 'Miscellaneous special rules for computation of income'. Sub-clause (1) says that for the purposes of corporation tax, income tax law as applied by clause 49 is to have effect subject to sub-clauses (2) to (8) of clause 50. The first of these is concerned with the computation of income from trades carried on by the company. What is a 'trade'? Clause 83 (2) (i) provides that 'trade' includes 'vocation', and 'includes also an office or employment or the occupation of woodlands in any context in which the expression is applied to that in the Income Tax Acts'. This definition, or rather extension, applies 'except in so far as the context otherwise requires'. The word 'trade' also has an extended definition in section 526 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, where it includes 'every trade, manufacture, adventure or concern in the nature of trade', 'except so far as is otherwise provided or the contest otherwise requires'. Added to this clause 83 (3) of the Finance Bill which says:

> 'Except as otherwise provided by this Part of this Act and except in so far as the context otherwise requires, expressions used in the Income Tax Acts have the same meaning in this Part of this Act; but no provision of this Part of this Act as to the interpretation of any expression, other than a provision expressed to extend to the use of that expression in the Income Tax Acts, shall be taken to affect its meaning in those Acts as they apply for the purposes of corporation tax.'

The cumulative effect of these provisions is to leave the reader in a state of confusion. Surely there is a better way of drafting whatever it is the draftsman is trying to achieve.

Having tried to see what 'trade' means in clause 50 (2), we may now examine what this sub-clause says. The sub-clause proceeds on the footing that a trade is a separately viable entity, distinct from the persons carrying it on. It provides (a) for a notional commencement of the trade as a new trade, and (b) a notional permanent discontinuance, where

(a) a company
  (i) begins to carry on the trade; or
  (ii) comes within the charge to corporation tax while carrying on the trade;

(b) a company
  (i) ceases to carry on a trade; or
  (ii) ceases to be within the charge to corporation tax while carrying on the trade.

In so far as (ii) is concerned, the rule is quite different from the income tax rule. In so far as (i) is concerned, this is the normal rule for income tax but there are of course exceptions. The practical consequences of this notional cessation are usually adverse to the taxpayer. Often an expense is disallowed because it relates to something happening in a previous ownership, as where property is acquired in a dilapidated state and the cost of repairing it is disallowed. Also the notional discontinuance usually puts an end to the carry-forward of losses and capital allowances.

Clause 50 (2) has to be read in the light (if one may so call it) of the proviso, which reads:

> 'Provided that where any provision of the Income Tax Acts is applied for corporation tax by this Part of this Act, this subsection shall not have effect for any purpose of that provision if under any enactment other than section 19 of the Finance Act, 1953, a trade is not to be treated by virtue of that section as permanently discontinued for the corresponding income tax purpose.'

Section 19 of the Finance Act, 1953, provides a code dealing with changes in the persons carrying on a trade, profession or vocation in the income tax sense. Broadly speaking, this always causes a notional permanent discontinuance for tax purposes, except where there is a partnership, at least one partner stays on, and an election for the continuing basis is duly made. Superimposed on this code is section 17 of the Finance Act, 1954, which imposes continuance where a trade carried on by a company technically changes hands but is substantially owned by the same persons as before. It is to be borne in mind that clause 57 of the Bill contains provisions corresponding to section 17. This is a topic best dealt with by itself.

Clause 50 (3) which permits the deduction of certain bank loan interest has already been mentioned above. Besides modifying clause 49 (5) (b), it is expressed to modify (in favour of a 'trade') section 137 (l) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which prohibits the deduction of annual interest 'payable out of the profits or gains'. However, if the interest is truly an expense of running the trade, it cannot at the same time be paid out of the profits of that trade.

Clause 50 (4) deals with companies which have income from letting the right to work minerals in the United Kingdom. It permits the deduction of sums disbursed by the company

> 'wholly, exclusively and necessarily as expenses of management or supervision of those minerals in that (accounting) period'.

This provision corresponds to section 181 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which provides for relief by way of repayment in respect of such expenses. A proviso to section 181 (1) restricts the relief where the expenses have been allowed in computing income. A proviso to clause 50 (4) directs that any enactments restricting relief under section 181 is to apply in like manner to the deductions under clause 50 (4).

Instant D.C.F.–

by G. H. BAKER, A.C.I.S.

In order that discounted cash flow exercises can be readily accepted and appreciated by business men in general, accountants – whilst continuing expert study and discussion amongst themselves – will need to promote an uncomplicated standardized version as a means of demonstrating its basic simplicity and merit.

IT would appear that those most in favour of discounted cash flow (D.C.F.) are likely to strangle it by sheer over-enthusiasm which leads them to wrangle on infinite detail and academic theories. Some recent publications in Britain may be useful to the specialist exponent but they do not help the ordinary business man, technicians or even top executives. These are the people who make the investment decisions, who should be won over to accept D.C.F. as a useful decision-making aid. Yet too little effort is made to present the case to them. They are busy men in their own fields, needing an understanding of the basic principles only, stated simply and clearly for easy acceptance by any practical-minded person who has not been put off by too much academic detail. Every effort should be made to simplify and sharpen the conception.

The Title

As a preliminary simplification in explaining the technique, the title 'Discounted Cash Flow' should be converted to 'Cash Movements – Discounted'. The expression 'cash movements' is preferable because 'cash flow' is used in the financial world to mean net profits plus depreciation, whereas it is used here to cover all consequential payments and receipts; this is important because in D.C.F. exercises on comparative costs, profits and depreciation are not involved. 'Discounted' should come last to emphasize that discounting is a separate final step used as a refinement of the cash movement figures after these have been established.

Two Main Uses of D.C.F.

Another simplification which will facilitate acceptance is to draw a clear distinction between the two main uses of D.C.F.:

(a) Cost comparison exercises. – To compare the costs of two alternatives, e.g. to lease or buy a motor van, or to compare coal-fired boilers with oil-fired boilers.

(b) Profitability exercises. – To measure the profitability of a single project.

Let us concentrate on cost comparisons for our first presentation of the simple facts. To 'sell' D.C.F. for use in such exercises we have merely to state:

(1) that conventional accounting practice does not give the true picture because it is limited to one sample year only, when actually there is no single year which is fully representative or normal because there will be heavy capital outlay in the earlier years, and because factors such as tax allowances are unevenly spread;

(2) that D.C.F. is most comprehensive, embracing all cash movements over the full life of the project to the final close-down;

(3) that discounting is the subsequent refinement of the cash figures to allow for the effect which time has on the cost of raising the cash. Thus in a ten-year period, cash raised in the seventh year will cost less in interest (four years) than cash raised in the first year (ten years' interest).

Cost Comparison Exercises

These three statements can be amplified in case any of the points are not readily acceptable:

(1) The conventional method arises from the discipline legally imposed on companies and their accountants to produce annual accounts by artificially forcing an extended sequence of events to fit into a twelve-month period. But that is no reason why the one-year period should be adopted for measuring a ten-year project. Those who are not prepared to take a hard look at the future should not be entrusted with investment decision making. There are people who tend to see only what they wish to see, and it is a virtue of D.C.F. that they are forced to take a view of the future prospects and also of the residual value of the assets at the end of the project life. It is only D.C.F. which can reflect in the answer such 'once only' occurrences as pre-production expenses in year 1; investment and initial tax allowances affecting year 2; residual value of capital assets in the final year.

(2) D.C.F. is more realistic by the use of cash movements instead of 'conventional estimates' because it simplifies the problem of what to include and when. All cash movements which arise as a consequence of the project are included and introduced into the exercise in the year when payment will take place. Each year's cash total is shown separately so that discounting can be applied on a yearly basis.

(3) When dealing with the discounting refinements, it should be remembered that for the moment attention is being concentrated on cost comparison exercises and the net cash movements column on each of the projects will contain outgoings. These, when totalled, are compared as an alternative means of reaching a given objective. A total of the year-by-year cash movement figures is already an improvement on the conventional twelve months' basis. But total them again after they have been discounted at a 'cost of capital' rate of, say, 7 per cent and it may be found that the picture has changed, as in the following example:

Years	Net Cash Movements Project A £	Net Cash Movements Project B £	Discounting Factors at 7 per cent	Discounted Project A £	Discounted Project B £
2	2,700	1,700	·87	2,349	1,479
3	1,600	2,800	·83	1,312	2,296
4	400	2,000	·76	304	2,280
Total costs ..	£7,700	£8,000		£6,755	£6,520

After discounting, Project B becomes the cheaper because the largest sums do not have to be paid until the later years and this is a relief to funding costs (interest charges etc.) which is the factor not taken into the calculations until the discounting process is applied to the figures. Otherwise the year-by-year cash figures are not all of the same tenor.

Profitability Measurements

Let us now switch to the kind of exercise which measures the worthwhileness of a single project, for which purpose the conventional yardstick is 'per cent return on additional capital employed'. D.C.F. does not change the yardstick but merely calculates it more accurately. As in the comparative cost exercise, the year-by-year cash movements arising out of the project from commencement to close-down are set out but this time there is an extra column for the year-by-year profits.

This income column will contain 'profits plus depreciation' which will then be merged with the outgoings to form the net cash movements column. If profits are sufficient to cover the outgoings, this column will be showing a surplus and we then proceed to discount. Successive years into the future are more heavily discounted, because as the project period runs out they have less effect on the evaluation result. Since the later years are the 'income years' when the new plant is earning, the surplus previously shown in the net cash movements column is diminished.

Suppose we discount at a cost of capital rate of 7 per cent and the surplus, although diminished, is not wiped out, then we know that the project earnings have more than covered the cost of raising the money to pay for the investment. If the discount rate is raised further until the surplus just disappears, then that rate is the per cent return on additional capital employed. This is the measure of the earnings – that they are sufficient to pay back the borrowed capital plus interest at the rate arrived at by this D.C.F. solution. In other words, the project is so good it could stand this higher rate and still break even, as is demonstrated in the example which concludes this article.

To reiterate, the simple D.C.F. rules are:

(1) Take the full life of the project and not a twelve-month sample.

(2) Use cash movements year by year.

(3) (a) In cost comparisons discount each year's total at cost of capital rate, and then total.

(b) For profitability measurement find the discount rate which will reduce the earnings surplus to zero.

Investment Decisions

Management will realize that the D.C.F. exercise does not make the decision for them. They still have to apply judgement, assess the risk element, and include non-financial factors. They must also consider the basic assumptions upon which the calculations have been made and which should be clearly stated on every D.C.F. statement presented to them. Although it may be found necessary to include some broad assumptions, management can be confident that by using D.C.F., all the facts stated are accurately interpreted.

CAPITAL INFLOW

RECENT Budget measures aimed at restricting the outflow of investment capital from the United Kingdom are similar in intention to the American Interest Equalization Tax. The German Government has recently been compelled to take action for precisely the reverse reasons to those underlying the British and American taxes. In Germany an influx of capital attracted by the comparatively high interest rates has been generating inflationary pressure, and the German Parliament has now passed a Bill for a withholding tax on bond interest paid to non-residents. An article in European Taxation (March 1965) comments that the German measure has the advantage that it does not affect bona fide investors resident in tax treaty countries whereas the British and American measures, being less flexible, may create problems. The journal points out that 'tax complications on an international level should not be increased if at all avoidable'. This is certainly true. Unfortunately where national interests conflict with international interests it is the latter which suffer.

FISCAL EFFECTS

READERS will recall that one of the disadvantages of the profits tax was the encouragement it gave to firms to finance any extension in activities by means of loan capital, and at the same time discriminated unfairly against those companies which had raised a significant proportion of their capital in preference shares. The proposed corporation tax seems likely to have somewhat similar effects, and the City Editor of The Times goes so far as to suggest that in course of time the balance of the whole capital structure of private industry could be altered. This is because the new corporation tax will be levied on net earnings after loan charges. Likewise preference dividends will have to be paid out of net profits. The major difference between the corporation tax and the profits tax lies in the rate. The discrimination against share capital is now much more marked.

Whether investors will be as interested in loan as in equity capital is another matter. Inflation conscious investors may well be prepared to forgo income in order to protect their capital in the long run, even when allowance is made for the capital gains tax. At the time of writing, however, only one thing is certain. The investing public must learn to live with the corporation tax, just as it had to adjust itself to the old profits tax.

TAX RELIEF FOR ART

READERS will be familiar from Press reports of the remarkable prices paid for works of art at recent auctions. American business tycoons have been pre-eminent in this respect and, while some of the prices no doubt comes from their capital, readers may be aware that the United States tax laws enable a certain proportion of a personal annual income to be used to make gifts of works of art to museums and galleries.

In Britain the nearest comparable relief is provided under estate duty law whereby, if a major work of art is the subject of a bequest by a testator, then its value is not aggregated with the rest of his estate for duty purposes. The report of the National Gallery to December 1964 notes the rising cost of acquiring new works and asks whether the tax system in Britain should continue 'to let culture starve in order that we may keep our tax system perfectly consistent'.

MARRIED WOMEN

THE need to attract married women back to the teaching profession has revived the question of tax relief for the working wife. Despite numerous complaints the fact of the matter is, as every practitioner knows, that the married woman who is gainfully occupied is especially favourably treated under the income tax rules, bearing in mind that the principle of aggregation is ignored. It is noteworthy that in a recent Parliamentary question Mr MacDermot stated that the cost to the Exchequer of allowing married women to earn up to £520 per annum free of tax would be about £90 million. On the further point as to the cost of confining such relief only to married women teachers, Mr MacDermot made the obvious point that such a concession could hardly be confined to that particular profession.

The Minister might also have added the point that there will be many taxpayers who feel that since the cost of women teachers' education has, in the vast majority of cases, been financed at the taxpayer's expense, further fiscal inducements are, to say the least, inappropriate.

CAPITAL GAINS

THE proposed treatment of capital gains realized by companies in the United Kingdom in Mr Callaghan's proposals may be contrasted with the new proposals in France. In future, short-term gains which arise where an asset is sold within two years of its acquisition are to be taxed at the ordinary rate of corporate tax (50 per cent), but payment of this tax may be spread over a period of five years. Long-term gains are those realized upon the sale of assets held for more than two years and these are subject only to a 10 per cent rate. Even in the U.S.A. companies are only charged at the flat rate of 25 per cent.

While the 30 per cent rate on long-term gains for personal taxpayers proposed by Mr Callaghan is above the U.S.A. rate, what does not appear to have been fully appreciated is that this proposed flat rate is regressive. In other words, the same rate applies to the middle income groups as to the higher surtax payers. This contrasts unfavourably with the United States tax, whereby long-term gains are charged at half the taxpayer's marginal rate. Thus the effective top rate, i.e. 25 per cent, equal to half the maximum of 50 per cent, does not apply until the taxpayer is well up the immediate scale. But the biggest effective concession under United States law is that appreciated assets pass on death without being chargeable to tax. This is of especial significance to members of closely-held corporations on the death of a shareholder.

SURTAX COMPLICATIONS

THE introduction of the corporation tax, since it provides an inducement to retain rather than distribute profits, will need to be accompanied, as the Chancellor has pointed out, by measures to limit potential avoidance. This is especially true of the private or surtax company, to which section 254 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, applies.

While the boards of public companies will tend on the whole to try and maintain the distributions to their shareholders, and for this reason will find their task complicated by the corporation tax, private companies are in the converse position. In other words, it is difficult to see how industry can speak with a single unified voice on the type of corporation tax it would like to see. As far as Mr Callaghan's proposals go, it seems fairly evident that private companies should be much happier about the prospects than public companies, always assuming that any new avoidance legislation is no more difficult to live with than the existing powers of direction possessed by the Special Commissioners.

TAX RELIEF FOR HOUSING

THE rapid increase in the cost of houses is making it increasingly difficult for the lower income groups to become owner-occupiers. One of the major concessions given the average and, more especially, the well-to-do house purchaser is the tax relief granted in respect of annual interest charges on borrowed money. Given the progressiveness of the income tax and surtax structure, the wealthier the taxpayer, the larger is the relief obtained from this concession. In an article in the District Bank Review for December, Professor A. J. Merritt and Mr Alan Sykes put forward proposals for equalizing these benefits regardless of the income of the house purchaser-cum-owner-occupier.

They assume that the tax allowance on interest is justified as an outright subsidy to owner-occupiers and, on this basis, it is in evident need of reform. They suggest that any borrower, regardless of his present rate of tax, should have the option to withhold and retain tax in respect of annual payments arising from the purchase of an owner-occupied house at standard rate of income tax. Furthermore, they propose that interest on house mortgages should not result in any loss on earned income relief. At the present time, where all income is earned the relief is thereby reduced, whereas with a surtax payer or person with unearned income equal to the annual interest charged, the relief is given at a higher rate.

The main advantages of this particular proposal are that it is certain and independent of the borrower's income, which among the lower income groups may vary owing to sickness or unemployment, and that the concession is effectively concentrated almost entirely on those who need it most. It would also cost relatively little to the Government; the authors estimate a cost of about £21 million. The attractions of this practicable proposal for the people concerned must, however, be set against the probable effect on house prices of the upsurge in demand which such a concession could generate.

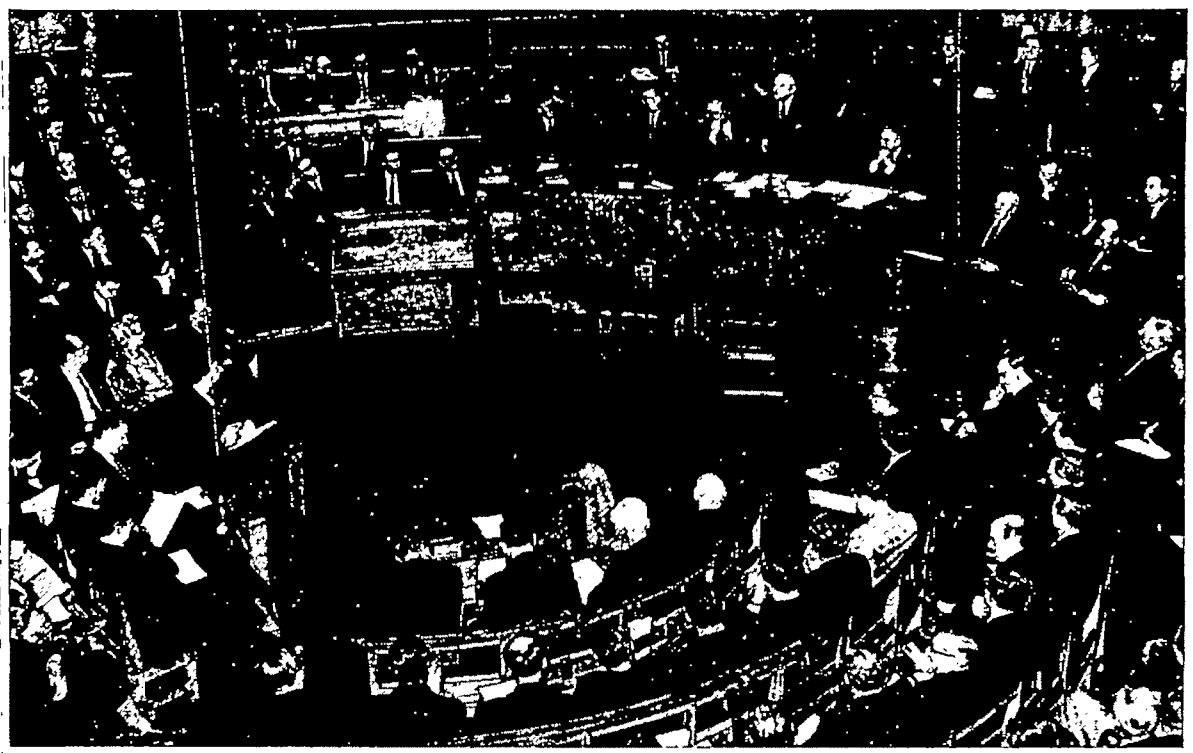
SOME INDUCEMENT

READERS will be familiar with the variety of fiscal inducements which are offered by overseas countries to encourage the location of new industries. So-called pioneer industries relief is a feature of the tax systems of numerous emergent economies. The Canadian Tax Journal reports an interesting contrast with the type of advertisement so often seen in the national Press, which appeared in a Canadian newspaper. The article stated: 'Barrie City Council offers industry no special concessions to locate. No one pays for anyone else. Its policy is simply to create the best climate in which industry can flourish.' And growth has been excellent; in the past decade the number of industries locating has more than doubled to thirty-seven!

One can but hope that the implications of this will not be lost on Governments nearer home.

BUSINESS SESSIONS at the Annual Meeting of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

The Budget



THE Vice-President, Mr Robert McNeil, F.C.A., took the chair at the business session on the Budget and introduced the speakers, Mr A. R. Ilersic, B.COM., M.SC.(ECON.), F.I.S., Reader in Economics and Social Statistics in the University of London, Mr S. Kitchen, F.C.A., and Mr D. S. Morpeth, B.COM., F.C.A. The economic aspects of the Budget proposals were expeditiously dealt with by Mr Ilersic. He explained that the Budget had two objectives – (1) to balance the overseas payments account, and (2) to prevent what is commonly called 'overheating in the economy'.

Overseas Investment

In order to improve the overseas capital account position the Chancellor had attempted to reverse the trend in previous years of encouraging overseas investment by various exchange control devices. These were always the easiest restrictions to avoid. He had also set out to reduce the return on overseas investment after tax and to tighten up Treasury control of overseas investment. There had, in fact, been an improvement of £100 million in the overseas capital account.

The position in overseas current account was not so promising. The deficit of £374 million could only be reduced by cutting imports or increasing exports. The Budget proposals did not do either of these things. The control of imports by the temporary surcharge had not proved to be successful and the Budget proposals made no attempt to encourage exports in any way. Last year was an exceptionally bad year economically but there were signs of recovery as the overseas current account is more in balance.

Referring to the second objective of the Budget, namely, to prevent 'overheating', Mr Ilersic said that the Chancellor had taken £500 million out of the economy by cancellation of projects like the TSR 2 aircraft, but this would be of no benefit unless there was a reduction of strain on the labour market or a diversion of production to exports. The withdrawal from the economy was insufficient when Government spending was £430 million higher than the previous year. This only reduced the share of the private sector which was a doubtful advantage. The Budget did nothing to help investment. Capital allowances were under review, but investment allowances should be retained because, despite the Richardson Committee's findings, most business investment was concerned with the return after tax.

A general view of the session in progress. Mr Stanley Kitchen, F.C.A., is speaking, with (to his right): Mr R. McNeil, F.C.A., Vice-President of the Institute, who took the chair, and Mr A. R. Ilersic, B.COM., M.SC.(ECON.), F.I.S., and (to his left), Mr D. S. Morpeth, B.COM., F.C.A.

Commenting on the capital gains tax and corporation tax, Mr Ilersic said that these had no economic advantages – they merely adjusted the distribution of income while making increased strictures on enterprise. He said that considering that the U.S.A. retained the concept of a Western hemisphere corporation and France, South Africa and Germany were moving towards the existing United Kingdom system of taxing corporations, he could see no advantage in cancelling the overseas trading corporation arrangements – which only cost the Revenue £2 million each year – nor in changing the current system of corporate taxation.

The Capital Gains Tax

Mr Kitchen dealt with the principal points of the capital gains tax and despite his opening warning that his knowledge was sparse because the Finance Bill had only recently been issued, he had obviously made a thorough study of its provisions.

Briefly, acquisitions before Budget day would be subject to the old short-term gains tax, if sold within six months in the case of securities, or three years in the case of land. Acquisitions after Budget day would be subject to the new short-term gains tax if sold within twelve months and losses on short-term transactions would only be available against short-term gains. Acquisitions at any time would be subject to the new long-term gains tax.

The assets covered by the scheme were more extensive than under the old gains tax. In the case of quoted securities or land with development value, there were two alternatives for calculating the gain or loss. These were: (1) the disposal value, less the cost, or (2) the disposal value less the Budget day value. If both (1) and (2) showed a gain or loss the lesser would be taken, but if (1) shows a loss and (2) shows a gain or vice versa, then there would be neither a gain nor a loss. In the case of other assets there was the alternative of the time apportionment formula or value at Budget day. Chattels were introduced for capital gains tax by the Finance Bill for the first time, but would only be subject to tax if sold for more than £1,000. Special arrangements had been made for wasting assets which were defined as assets with a predictable life under fifty years provided the asset was not a 'mature animal'. The provisions in respect of leases were so complex that Mr Kitchen felt unable to deal with them in the time available.

After he had mentioned the delay of charge to capital gains tax in respect of business assets subsequently replaced, Mr Kitchen referred to the application of the tax on death, which for capital gains tax purposes was regarded as a transaction. All assets would be valued at the estate duty valuation but the costs of disposal on sale or of distribution to beneficiaries would be allowed as a deduction. The gains and losses would be aggregated and only the net amount which exceeded £5,000 would constitute a chargeable gain or loss.

No advantage could be taken of short-term losses unused at date of death, but long-term losses including losses deemed to arise on death could be set off against gains arising in the year of assessment in which death occurred or the two previous years of assessment.

Settled property would be deemed to be disposed of on the termination of a life interest. Discretionary trusts would be regarded as disposing of the assets every ten years, but losses incurred by the trustees pass to the residuary legatee.

The Corporation Tax

Mr D. S. Morpeth spoke of the new basis of corporation tax and the fact that where the accounting period ended on a date other than March 31st, tax would be payable at two rates – applicable to the parts of the accounting period falling into different financial years.

The law and cases applicable to income tax would apply requiring computation of the income from each separate source all of which would then be aggregated and charged to corporation tax after deducting annual charges. Capital allowances would be treated as a trading expense. It should be noted that deduction is available only for annual charges paid not payable.

The income tax deductible from distributions would be charged under the new Schedule F and distribution included both capital and revenue dividends. Anti-avoidance provisions are similar to those for profits tax where for instance a bonus issue followed a reduction of capital.

'Close companies' would include far more companies than were affected by the surtax direction legislation, for the exemption for companies where 25 per cent of the share capital was owned by the public no longer applied. A 'close company' was one controlled by five or fewer participators or their associates or one controlled by its directors. The term 'participator' may include a loan creditor. The remuneration of directors of close companies was limited and any excess would be regarded as a distribution as would payments to participators.

The required standard of distribution would be all the investment income and 60 per cent of the trading income and for this purpose a dividend from a subsidiary would be investment income. A company which did not distribute the required standard would be subject to a direction for both income tax and surtax.

At the conclusion of the addresses, the Vice-President opened the meeting to questions. These were many and varied and continued until the meeting was closed an hour later. The questions raised, among others, the problems of the meaning of land with development value, the meaning of control in the case of close companies, the valuation of shares in a private company. The most amusing question was a request for an explanation of paragraph 9 (2) of Schedule 6 – which has apparently been omitted in drafting the Finance Bill.

The session concluded with a vote of thanks to the speakers.

Stock Exchange Recommendations

AT the session on 'The recent recommendations of the Stock Exchange in relation to the accounts of public companies', Messrs W. S. Wareham, of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock Exchange, R. G. Leach, C.B.E., F.C.A., and H. Hodgson, F.C.A., provided the platform to stimulate discussion and the chair was taken by Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A.

Introducing the speakers, the chairman commented that revision of company law did not seem to feature on the Government's list of priorities.

Mr W. S. Wareham then spoke on the background to the publication of Lord Ritchie's letter to company chairmen of last August. Without arguing the case for the disclosure of full information, he stated that the object of the Stock Exchange was to create an efficient market in quoted securities by ensuring that the same information was equally available to both buyer and seller.

Flexibility

He stated that the chairman of the session, Mr Parker, had headed a three-man committee in the Institute's official discussions with the Stock Exchange, pointing out difficulties and objections which had impressed the Stock Exchange that its recommendations, though forceful, should allow some considerable discretion to the reporting companies. Flexibility in application thus brought fuller disclosure within the scope of all the multifarious operations of quoted companies.

The Stock Exchange had found that the waiver in respect of material interests covered most of the objections of damaging disclosure that had been raised: for example, subsidiaries in foreign places of political unrest. The flexibility extended to interim reports where these must take a different form from that usually anticipated, due to the nature of extraneous operations. Thus, for tea and rubber plantations, comparative figures for the corresponding crops were more appropriate than those based on time.

He added that the Share and Loan Department was always ready for consultation on any of the recommendations causing difficulty in particular cases.

Uniformity

Mr Leach lamented that it should be the Stock Exchange rather than the accountant who set the pace in the public presentation of accounts. This had come about by the Companies Acts subjecting the professional accountant to preoccupation with auditing a 'true and fair view' as closely defined by an imperfect set of rules; the public and the investing and commercial interests were demanding more; yet the accountant was still bound by legislation.

In the United States the accountant had fulfilled another role. There being no equivalent Companies Act, professional accountants had to formulate and project accepted accounting principles, the Securities Exchange Commission merely being the official watchdog for dealings in the larger corporations.

Misrepresentation

In a provocative talk, Mr H. Hodgson pictured management poised in delicate balance, with recommended disclosure upsetting this and jeopardizing success.

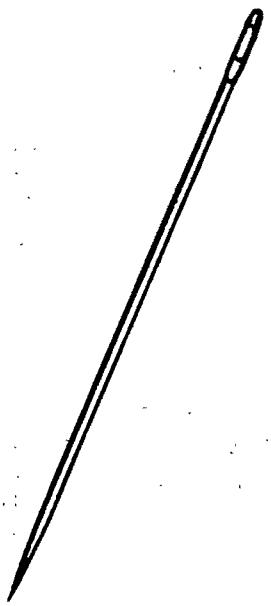
The argument that all companies were treated alike was fallacious by reason of the flexibility intentionally afforded by Lord Ritchie's letter. If one company was not to stand at a disadvantage with another, only the precision of formal legislation could achieve uniformity of disclosure and define the rules determining it. If window-dressing results to 'look right' were to be avoided, then, for example, the exact method of apportioning overheads to the products analysed must be observed.

The complications inherent in this were enormous and Mr Hodgson opposed both the content and looseness of the new recommendations. He aimed his attack at two specific points: (i) disclosure of division and product analysis; and (ii) interim reporting, and justified his fears in believing that, if misinterpretation were to be avoided, detailed explanatory notes must often be given (and this Mr Wareham welcomed).

Mr Hodgson thought that the volume of information sought by the Stock Exchange stood in danger of being indigestible and subject to misrepresentation by the Press, which would be damaging. Results might vary under the influence of seasonal and many other factors which could not adequately be compensated; also the effects of long-term engineering contracts – which were difficult enough to determine annually – would become meaningless at more frequent intervals. The Press saw only the outlines of operations and he feared it would not penetrate the depths.

He thought that to withhold the knowledge of temporary advances or recession shielded shareholders and the public and, of course, the market, from any unwarranted optimism or pessimism they might choose to assume.

Practice Administration



THE business session on 'Practice administration' was held under the chairmanship of the President of the Institute, Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A., and the introductory remarks were made by Mr E. Kenneth Wright, M.A., F.C.A., and Mr David Steele, F.C.A.

The President, introducing the two main speakers, stated that the particular subject now chosen for discussion had emerged from answers received during the practitioner inquiry. He added that the idea of a series of booklets on various aspects of practice administration had been sponsored by the Public Relations Committee, and he hoped these would be well received. He also hoped that after the introductory remarks had been made the discussion would be broad.

The Institute's Practice Booklets

Mr E. Kenneth Wright referred to the series of booklets being prepared, the first of which had recently been issued, and expressed the view that it was surprising that the Institute's syllabus did not include any formal training in the administration of a practice – possibly because of the British tradition of management amateurism, now (rightly) under fire. The meetings at summer courses and elsewhere had led to a sharing and an interchange of ideas, and of experience.

The first ten booklets to be published might be described in commercial language as an exercise in merchandising, organization, production and finance for professional firms. Mr Wright described his own book, the first to be published, entitled The Development of an Accounting Practice, as dealing with merchandising – what services clients needed, whether they were aware of the need or not, how they could be sold to clients, how they could be presented to best advantage, and so on.

Mr Wright reviewed the titles of the remaining booklets and their scope, and also commented on the background of their various authors. In respect of one booklet – Controls for the Effective Use of Time and the Keeping of Time Records – he anticipated it might introduce the tool of critical path planning in the conduct of an audit. All these books would contain their authors' own views and opinions and some might be controversial and would not represent a formal Council publication. Anyone who disagreed was invited to try his own hand at a booklet! The initial response had been very encouraging and 2,000 of his own booklet had already been sold.

It was hoped that district societies would meet and discuss the subject and that partners in firms, or groups of associated and friendly firms, would privately discuss the topics. Mr Wright expressed the hope that members would seek to do what they could to improve their profession, their firms and themselves.

Assisting the Practitioner

Mr David Steele spoke of the suggestions which had been made about some sort of consultancy service and asked how this affected the small practitioner. How should he obtain the advice he needs? It had been asked why the Institute did not have such a service but, apart from the immediate problem of competing with its own members, it would obviously be difficult for any such service to maintain experienced staff if they were divorced from general practice. Nor could the Institute recognize specialist firms, or firms with specialist departments, for who could judge such claims to specialism impartially? Even a register would involve a choice.

Mr Steele was certain the answer lay in establishing discussions of members on the lines of the business sessions, either at district society or other convenient level, or with colleagues or associates. Perhaps London 'agents' had a part to play and although small firms might fear the loss of work to such agents, a specific agreement not to accept clients from introductions of this nature should resolve such doubts. Turning to the benefits of mergers, Mr Steele quoted the low figures of earnings of partners (averaging £1,750 to £3,400 in single to nine-partner firms) as a warning to the profession to achieve efficiency and added three efficiency ratios, namely, the charging rate for time of partners and staff compared with fees rendered; net profit compared with gross fees; and charging rates to Treasury scale adjusted to present money values. He suggested that 80 per cent of time available should be recovered in fees, that net profit should be above 40 per cent and that a charging rate of £1 per cent of annual salary, per day, was reasonable.

Most of the subsequent discussion was on the subject of fees, both their level and methods of charging time, as well as rendering bills and getting them paid!

Apart from many points on the desirability of maintaining a proper level of income so as to pay proper salaries to staff and have time for study and keeping up to date, there was, however, discussion of a number of matters such as the merits of consultancy, mechanization for incomplete records work, departmentalization of growing firms, the effects of mergers on client relationships and the merits of the Institute running (perhaps at district society level) seminars on practice administration. The subject of rapid reading techniques was also discussed, several members commenting on the benefits they had derived from taking courses in 'quick reading'.

Mr D. Steele, F.C.A., speaking at the session on 'Practice administration'. Also in the picture are Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A., President of the Institute, who took the chair, and Mr E. K. Wright, M.A., F.C.A.

Weekly Notes

LIFE OFFICES versus THE CHANCELLOR

THERE has been a brisk exchange between the Life Offices in England and Scotland and the Treasury about the extent to which the Chancellor has honoured his undertaking of December 8th last that sums received on the maturity or surrender of normal policies of life assurance would be exempt from capital gains tax. The Offices said in their letter that they found that the qualifications for exemption in clause 27 of the Finance Bill are so restricted that the proceeds of numerous policies which they regard as 'normal' would be liable to the tax. The next day the Treasury replied with a statement that the Bill was not aimed at catching 'employees and others insured under pension schemes', although why members of pension schemes should be so much more worthy than individuals who do their own saving up for old age was not explained. The Treasury said that if any amendments to the Bill were needed 'to make the position clear', they would be introduced by the Government. As to policies for named dependants (in addition to wife and children) and small policies on relatives, 'sympathetic consideration would be given'. The Treasury memorandum concluded by the somewhat sinister assurance that 'the Chancellor has this in hand'.

The Life Offices then came back with the argument that no life policies should attract gains tax, seeing that the life fund itself paid such tax. It is to be hoped that the Chancellor will put this in hand, too.

LIFE POLICIES ESCAPE ESTATE DUTY

THE Revenue recently suffered an important reverse in the High Court when Mr Justice Cross held that no liability to estate duty under section 2 (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, arose in respect of fourteen policies of assurance on the life of Mr Stewart Kilpatrick, for an aggregate sum of £66,639. Each policy was issued under section 11 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882

> 'for the benefit of the wife of the assured if she shall survive the assured by more than one month. If she should not survive the assured for the period of one month then this policy shall be for the benefit of the two sons of the assured. . . .'

The trustees had the widest power of investment.

The assured died on October 20th, 1961, and the wife survived until June 30th, 1964. The Revenue claimed duty under section 2 (1) (d). The trustees conceded that the policies were 'interests' provided by the deceased but denied that the beneficial interest of the wife was an interest in expectancy. They argued that, on the principle of Phipps v. Ackers ((1842) 9 Cl. & Fin. 583), Mrs Kilpatrick already had, before her husband's death, a vested interest liable to be divested in the event of her failing to survive her husband by one month. Therefore no interest arose on his death or one month after his death. Even if an interest arose, it was not worth materially more than the vested interest which Mrs Kilpatrick already had. The provisions in section 28 of the Finance Act, 1934, for disregarding the value of a beneficiary's expectant interest had no application where the beneficiary's existing interest was already vested. Mr Justice Cross (according to The Times, of May 12th) accepted the trustees' arguments and rejected the Crown's claim to duty.

PARTNERS' PENSIONS AND CLAUSE 12

ON Thursday of last week, the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales sent a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer about clause 12 of the Finance Bill. This clause extends the scope of section 415 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which provides in effect that income under certain 'settlements' is to be treated as the settlor's income for surtax purposes. Hitherto, covenanted annual payments made to individuals (as distinct from payments made to charities) have been exempt from section 415; clause 12 terminates this exemption.

The President is concerned with the possible effect of clause 12 in relation to retirement arrangements for partners in a great many professional firms. Under these arrangements the continuing partners apply part of the firm's income in the payment of pensions to their predecessors, or to the relatives of deceased predecessors. Acceptance of the burden of these payments (and the prospect of benefiting from them in turn in due course) are often important features of the understanding on which new partners enter a professional firm. The letter makes the point that these arrangements are not a question of bounty but are widely adopted for cogent business reasons affecting the existence, as well as the development, of professional firms. Although the Finance Act, 1956, eased the problem of providing for old age, it did not solve it. The arrangements mentioned are an important factor in attracting to professional partnerships men of the right calibre. Moreover, older partners who can look to these retirement pensions are better able to allocate more of the firm's profits to younger colleagues 'and thus assist them to subscribe out of net income their own share of the firm's working capital'.

The President adds that in the accountancy profession in particular, various factors have combined to make the problems of providing the requisite working capital increasingly intractable. It is imperative, in his view, that persons of the necessary ability should not be precluded from partnership by lack of capital or sufficient net income to enable them to accumulate it. If, because of clause 12, the pensions paid were not deductible for surtax purposes, the cost of paying them would be so greatly increased that substantial reduction of them would be unavoidable. In that event, says the President, there would be a drastic change in the financial outlook of partners now approaching retirement who would either have to reduce their living standards or postpone retirement. In the long run, difficulties of recruiting suitable people to professional partnerships would be increased.

The letter concludes with a request for an assurance that the arrangements in question would not fall within the definition of 'settlement' in section 415, as applied by section 411 (2). If that assurance cannot be given, then it asks that clause 12 be amended to exclude those arrangements.

Section 411 (2) says that 'settlement' includes 'any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement or arrangement'. This is very wide, but it seems to be accepted by the Inland Revenue that 'some element of bounty is necessary to make the sections apply' (C.I.R. v. Leiner, 43 A.T.C. 56, Plowman, J., at page 60). Perhaps this is what the President has in mind in his reference to bounty. Where the relative of a deceased partner receives a pension, the element of bounty is present between the deceased partner and the relative, but, of course, the legislation aimed against settlements presupposes that the settlor is still alive. The actual payers of the pension are carrying out a purely business arrangement which they had already come to with the deceased.

INVESTMENT TRUSTS ATTACK THE BILL

THE Association of Investment Trusts has produced a memorandum attacking the new Finance Bill, and is asking its members (investment trust companies) to distribute this memorandum to their shareholders. As predominantly owners of ordinary shares, investment trusts suffer like other ordinary shareholders from the increased taxation on them. But the Association complains that investment trusts 'are also being made to carry added burdens from which individual shareholders and the generality of companies are to be free'.

The first complaint is that whereas individuals suffer only 30 per cent capital gains tax on investments held for over a year before resale, investment trusts will pay corporation tax 'at 35 per cent or more – say 40 per cent'. A trading company, according to the memorandum, is relieved of the worst effects. If it reinvests the proceeds of the sale of a business asset in the purchase of a new asset of the same class for use for the purposes of the trade no immediate tax liability arises on the profit which may be thrown up on the sale. True, but not even a trading company can obtain such relief on the sale of an investment.

The second complaint is that, although the shareholder in an investment trust is allowed to treat a proportion of the trust's capital gains as an additional cost of his shares (thus reducing his own capital gain) nevertheless the trust will have paid 'at 35 per cent (or perhaps 40 per cent)' as against his own rate of 30 per cent. More telling is the complaint that this relief will be of no advantage to charities and approved superannuation funds. The Association sees capital gains tax as inevitable because investment trusts have to keep changing their investments in the process of 'keeping their portfolios up to date'. It regards this as a 'steady erosion of their resources'. However, the capital gains tax is not levied on turnover, but on gains. A gain of £100, of which at least £60 remains after the tax, is hardly an erosion.

Another complaint is that investment trusts will 'as the Finance Bill is at present understood' be liable to corporation tax on income from overseas investments, but the private investor will not. It regards this as a 'penalty' on the less experienced individual investor, who can invest abroad intelligently only if he seeks skilled and expert management, i.e. only if he invests in an investment trust. This penalty will be in addition to the charge which the investment trust levies for its own remuneration.

COMPANY PROFITS

THE rising trend of profits, which first became apparent in the company accounts published in the third quarter of 1962, and which a year later appeared to be levelling out, has now been revived. An analysis by the Board of Trade Statistics Division of the annual accounts of 624 quoted companies whose accounting years ended in April 1964 or later, reveals that gross trading profits were 18 per cent higher than in the previous year. The sample is not fully representative of all United Kingdom industry since it is over-weighted in respect of the metal manufacturing and the drink industry. The largest profits increases were recorded in the metal manufacturing industries – an increase of 25 per cent – and the vehicle industry, an increase of one-third. Shipbuilding was the only industrial group to show a fall compared with the previous year, although firms in food, tobacco and retail trades earned increases of less than 5 per cent.

In the case of the metal manufacturing and electrical industries the increased rate of stock building which had been a marked feature of 1963 was fully maintained in 1964, but the food and tobacco industries showed falls. In the latest year, the amount spent by these companies on acquiring subsidiaries rose from £60 million to £105 million, which sum was met by raising £152 million by share issues and long-term loans, an increase of £85 million over the 1963 figure. An encouraging feature is the fact that in 1964 contracts for capital expenditure not provided for in the accounts rose by £60 million to £238 million; the largest single increase being made by the metal manufacturing industry.

INSTITUTE'S INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION

THE results of the March Intermediate examination under the new syllabus of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales are now announced. Of the 3,154 candidates who sat, 1,537 (48·8 per cent) passed and the names of these successful candidates appear on other pages of this issue.

The First Certificate of Merit, the Institute Prize, the Tom Walton Prize and the Plender Prize for the paper on Auditing were won by Mr Ashok Kumar Gupta, of London. The Second Certificate of Merit and the Plender Prize for the General Paper were won by Mr David John Barnes, of Manchester, and the Third Certificate of Merit and the Robert Fletcher Prize were won by Mr Farrokh Kaikhushru Kavarana, also of London.

In all, certificates of merit were awarded to sixteen candidates.

BUILDING TARGET IN DANGER?

THE level of interest rates at present in operation is a double-edged weapon against house building. It makes it difficult for the building society movement to attract new money and so maintain a high level of new mortgage business. It also raises the price of accommodation which the building industry has to pay and this is particularly serious for the small builder. It has to be remembered that a very high proportion of the houses built annually in the United Kingdom are still erected by small firms who employ not more than twenty-five operatives. It has been apparent for some time that high interest rates are a grievous deterrent to such concerns.

At the recent annual meeting of the largest building and construction engineering company in the United Kingdom, the chairman pointed out that they had had to cut back their house building operations in the private sector (that is to say houses not built for local authorities) because of the acute shortage of money, especially building society money. He went on to say that during 1965 the company would be operating below its programmed capacity in the house building field. So large companies, as well as small ones, are being affected.

An annual housing target of 400,000 dwellings has now become established as the potential of the building industry, given its present labour force, a reasonable rate of increase in productivity and assistance from prefabricated techniques and industrialized building. The continuing high level of interest rates, however, gradually brings this target into question. It seems unlikely that such a level could be maintained through 1965 and 1966 unless there are some favourable developments for the industry in the summer of 1965, not least cheaper finance.

There has been repeated talk of special assistance by the Government for the building society movement and this would certainly help the demand side of housing if the scheme were acceptable to and workable by the building society movement. The supply side is also in need of assistance, however. The building industry is a large user of materials and components and depression would have a similar effect on the economy as a whole, say, as a severe falling off in activity by the motor vehicle industry. It would therefore be possible, to take a gloomy view of the outlook, for a recession in the building industry to start off a more widespread deflation. There is not a great deal of time in which to remove the causes which might lead to such an outcome.

NO TAX ON EXERCISED OPTION

IT is an inveterate principle of income tax that where a trader disposes of trading stock in return, not for cash, but for something which can be turned into cash, he must bring in the market value of that something as a trading receipt. Suppose the item of trading stock is an option to buy certain shares at a fixed price of £100,000. And suppose that he exercises the option at a time when those shares are worth £217,500. Must he bring in the £117,500 as profit, or may he wait until he has disposed of the shares themselves? The House of Lords held, on May 13th, that he may wait (British South Africa Co v. Varty, The Times, May 14th). Perhaps the most remarkable thing about this decision is that the point had never been judicially decided until this litigation was begun.

The company won before the Special Commissioners, despite the fact that that body held as a matter of fact that the option was part of the company's trading stock. It won again in the High Court. After a false start, the Court of Appeal by a majority decided in favour of the Inland Revenue. Now, by another majority, the House of Lords have decided in favour of the company. Lord Donovan said that all that the company had done was to exercise a right. No profit emerged at this stage; and no principle of accounting known to his lordship supported the opposite view.

CREDIT AND SMALLER COMPANIES

THE Engineering Industries Association has now published its findings based on a questionnaire to members on the ratio of trade debts at a given date to turnover for the previous quarter. The date is December 31st, 1964, and the figures are compared with the corresponding ratios for the last day in December 1963 and then with the same time in 1961 and 1962. Over these four spot dates the percentage was 78·0, 75·6, 73·9 and 81·3. There was thus a fairly sharp reversal of the downward trend in December 1964.

The Association speaks of 'an alarming increase in the degree of credit taken at December 31st, 1964, as compared with previous results'. The figures are in fact not easy to interpret. It is true that trade debts increased as between the two dates from £6·96 million to £8·18 million, but turnover went up from £9·4 million to £10·07 million and it might be expected that a marginal increase in turnover when industry was already busy would be accompanied by a more than proportional rise in trade debts. The biggest increase in the percentage of trade debts was in the thirty firms in the sample with turnover over £250,000.

The sample for the last results was a modest one, only 104 compared with the 231 member firms which made a return in the years 1961 and 1962. That there has been an increase in the use of extended credit at December 1964 compared with December 1963 there is good evidence. It would take a more complete investigation to find exactly why.

RETAIL TRADE COMMON POLICY

ONE of the consequences of a high rate of technical change and the accompanying growing complexity of industrial organization is the tendency of representative organizations to become even larger. An example of this change is the suggestion of the Retail Distributors' Association to form a temporary co-ordinating committee with other major shop organizations to work out common policy.

In its annual report the Association remarks that since the change of Government in the autumn of 1964 events have shown the effect from the retail trades' point of view in having no single voice to speak for it. An instance of this was the Government's formation of policy on prices and incomes following discussion only with manufacturing industries. The Association goes on to say that it has decided it should take a positive line in approaching any other representative organization in the retail trade. The R.D.A. itself speaks for the large department stores. It has now suggested that a co-ordinating committee should be set up to include the co-operatives, independents, variety chains and supermarkets.

This is My Life . . .

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 277

OUR boardroom is situated at the rear corner of the third floor of the main block of buildings, looking out on the back of our transport and dispatch section. It's a fine old oak-panelled room, the walls nearly covered with scrolls and pictures, and the floor congested with odds and ends of furniture around the big table and heavy chairs.

Many of the items reflect the history of the company. There's the ancient engraved presentation clock, the brass inkstand, the small wall safe with last century's minute books, and the gavel with the coat-of-arms. There's also a screwdriver on a pad; that's my contribution.

On a drear evening in December some years ago a meeting of directors continued in rather verbose argument over a trade union wage claim until after seven o'clock. At length, they trooped out in glum silence; I stayed on. There was a tax lecture I wanted to hear at the nearby hotel at eight o'clock so it wasn't worth while going home. We'd had a tea tray around six so food wasn't a problem, and I proposed to draft a carefully phrased letter to the union while our discussion was fresh in my mind.

My first shock of the evening came when I went to open the boardroom door at a few minutes to eight. It was locked. Our commissionaire, elderly and impatient to get home, had lingered only long enough to see the meeting disperse, as he thought. Without thinking of counting heads he had locked up smartly behind the directors and hurried off through the rain. Absorbed in my letter '. . . unfortunately the current trading depression renders your claim economically impossible; nevertheless, the directors, in order to maintain goodwill . . .'. I hadn't heard the key click.

The switchboard operator, too, had left; the telephone burred unanswered. Leaning out of one window I saw the wet black shining yard and the row of empty delivery vans under their canopy; from the other window the bars of the rear exit gate were just visible. My second shock derived from the evident inadequacy of my loudest bellow to reach the side-street beyond.

The radiator was cooling rapidly, so it would soon be growing cold. They wouldn't expect me home till after midnight at the earliest. . . . I sat switching the light monotonously on and off in the hope that a passer-by might notice . . . the downpour drummed ceaselessly outside. It seemed stupid just sitting there, waiting to be let out at dawn; something must be done. After some further fruitless yells into the darkness I tried a forlorn hope on the heavy door.

Futile shoulder charges resulted in nothing but bruises, so the lock was the next target for assault. Four deep-set screws . . . a penknife to scrape away the paint . . . a thinly-worn penny to turn the corner screw . . . it was far from easy. By eleven o'clock I'd laboriously worked one of them loose at a cost of numbed and weary fingers. Next, some brisk leverage with the penknife blade, which snapped suddenly, taking a deep painful slice out of my thumb . . . I returned defeated to the light switch. On, off . . . midnight; my handkerchief was sodden crimson. On, off . . . one a.m.; judging by the cold it was a moot point whether pneumonia or long-drawn-out haemorrhage would receive sad mention at the morrow's inquest. On, off . . . it was after two when a courting couple noticed that it wasn't the moon that gleamed so intermittently, and initiated investigations.

The chairman, temperamentally averse to facetiousness in the boardroom, frowned suspiciously when I proffered a shiny screwdriver as an insurance against contingencies. It was only the union's sudden offer to compromise that induced him to accept it as a practical, if unorthodox, ornament for the mantelpiece.

Finance and Commerce

Henry's Stores

COMPLYING with Stock Exchange recommendations, the accounts of Henry's Stores Ltd show sales in value terms in the ten-year record, instead of in index terms as in the past. The fact that this is all the company has had to do to meet the requirements is evidence enough of efficient and full reporting over the years.

But in some ways it is unfortunate that the index figure should have been dropped. The index could well have been retained and the sales figures given in addition. This week's reprint of the accounts includes the 'Comparative Results 1956–1965' and shows how shareholders are given a look into the company in terms of sales, profits dividend cover and return on capital employed.

The latter figure, however, may be read in conjunction with a revaluation of properties undertaken in February. The properties were valued at £1,793,875, showing a surplus of £970,009 over book values, but the new valuation is not 'at present' to be written into the accounts.

It is to be hoped that this revaluation figure will be, so to speak, kept alive in future accounts. A note of the 1965 valuation in the 1965–66 accounts and in future years would be useful.

Compliment

The Henry's Stores financial year ran to February 18th, 1965, and the accounts, dated March 30th, were in shareholders' hands on April 27th. The chairman, Mr L. Cohen, in his statement to shareholders, compliments 'our accountants and auditors, Messrs E. A. Radford Edwards & Co, for the form in which the accounts are presented' and expresses 'appreciation for the speed in which the audit was completed'.

The chairman's policy is to give 'shareholders, staff and public, the fullest possible information about the business which they respectively own, work in and shop at'. He comments that 'if in so doing, competitors learn something to their advantage, I do not consider it of grave or paramount importance, although, of course, there may be some matters which it may not always be in the interests of shareholders to reveal until the matter ceases to be of advantage to competitors'.

On that point Mr Lewis recalls the story of Mr Macy and Mr Gimbel, the heads of two big rival New York department stores, who discovered that each was spending $100,000 a year on 'spying' on the other's business. Whereupon they agreed that each day they would tell each other how much business they were doing and so each save themselves $100,000 a year.

Sales Figures

THE Stock Exchange's request for turnover or sales figures has given Mr Cohen much less cause for concern than it has given the chairman of other and more complicated groups. It is held that breaking down sales figures too far in terms of divisional or subsidiary sales could lead to competitive complications.

The accounts of Alfred Herbert Ltd, the machine tool group, recently issued, were notable for the absence of a turnover or sales figure. Attempts at calculating the figure from the value to the company of the export rebate led to a figure which suggested that the group was making something like 40 per cent on turnover – which even Euclid would have acknowledged as absurd.

But should a company be content with such a position? Presumably when the Alfred Herbert company comes to issue new shares and wants them quoted on the Stock Exchange it will have to fall in with Stock Exchange reporting requirements. Presumably, also, the Alfred Herbert view is that if competitors learn something to their advantage it is of paramount importance to put Mr Cohen's comment in the positive, but since Alfred Herbert is the biggest machine tool organization in the world the degree of importance can surely hardly be paramount.

Credit Trading

Returning to Henry's Stores which, incidentally, is based on Manchester with a number of stores in that area and also in the West Midlands, the company is essentially a cash business. Introduction of credit facilities, Mr Cohen considers, would be a costly and laborious operation requiring specialist knowledge.

The view was taken that the best way to give customers the opportunity of buying on credit was to use the specialist services of the check companies such as the Provident Clothing & Supply Company. Experience of this type of trading had come to the company through the acquisition of two businesses where checks were already being accepted.

The sales volume brought was profitable, and in January last year checks were accepted at the company's two major stores in Manchester and Birmingham. The position is being watched very closely but there is considered to be little doubt that through net additional sales, business will be profitable. But besides the commission allowed to the check companies, other expenses in handling checks are involved and Mr Cohen says 'we are suggesting ways in which we believe the system can be improved to the benefit of all concerned, and not least the customer.'

CITY NOTES

ATTENTION drawn to the clearing banks' reply to Lord Cromer's directive on bank lending policy has caused the stock-market to think more in terms of economic recession later in the year than in terms of political hopes stemming from the swing away from the Government in the municipal elections.

Even acknowledging the fact that the impact of the restriction on lending may have been exaggerated in some reports, there is no doubt that the restrictions on lending in the private sector will be severe. Tightness of bank lending will quickly filter through into other financing spheres.

Doubt coupled with a shade of anxiety about the short-term economic prospect is hardly the background against which the equity market can be expected to thrive. There is, as usual, much talk of the weight of money available for investment but that weight is unlikely to be exerted under present conditions.

It is, in fact, difficult to see very far ahead at present in terms of the equity trend. The market is still being fortified by good profit and dividend news coming out of 1964 and 1964–65 operations, and to that extent the present pitch of prices is being underwritten.

Warnings about pressure on profit margins and of a possible decline in industrial activity later in the year are likely to become stronger and seem likely to make an impression on the equity market in due course.

* * * *

SIR MILES THOMAS, who has succeeded the late Lord Mackintosh as chairman of the National Savings Movement, can hardly be inspired by the current trend in the savings figures and more particularly in the figures for National Savings Certificates. Savings certificate repayments are running well ahead of receipts.

The current eleventh series has become out of line with interest rate conditions and there would appear to have been some movement out of certificates and into building societies where capital can earn, in many cases, 4 per cent compound interest tax free with interest reinvested.

The National Savings movement seems to stand in need of a new selling line.

THE ending of the short, sharp insurance company take-over battle between the London and Phoenix companies, through the intervention of an acceptable offer to London by the Sun Alliance company, has not answered the main question of what London Assurance shares are really worth. The London-Sun Alliance merger is said to make commercial sense since it is a merger of complementary, rather than competitive, companies.

The terms provide a market value for London shares well above that ruling before take-over rumours began. But is it the same kind of price that would, for instance, have been thrown up by a take-over tussle between two industrial companies whose operations, earnings, reserves and so on were fully disclosed?

* * * *

BANK rate at 7 per cent, coupled with the current squeeze on credit, is bringing very high coupon debentures to the stock-market. The Troydale Industries company has placed a 7½ per cent debenture and London City & Westcliff Properties a 7¼ per cent stock. There is still a ready market for this type of stock but the market is a highly sophisticated one and recent weakness in gilt-edged stocks has forced debenture rates up. In the gilt-edged market itself, a £12 million Kent County 6½ per cent 1975–77 issue at par was left 92 per cent with underwriters.

Presentation of The Accountant Annual Awards for 1965

Lord Mayor of London speaks of Basic Essentials in Company Accounts

PRESENTING The Accountant Annual Awards for 1965 to the chairmen of Thomas Tilling Ltd and Wolseley-Hughes Ltd at the Mansion House on Tuesday, the Lord Mayor of London, Sir James Miller, said it was basically essential that company reports and accounts should be good in their content and that they should be attractive, easily read and understood. The inception of The Accountant Annual Awards, he said, had greatly aided these objectives.

Mr Percy F. Hughes, Editor-in-Chief of The Accountant, presided, and also on the platform were the representatives of the winning companies, Sir Geoffrey Eley, C.B.E., Chairman, Thomas Tilling Ltd; Mr N. G. Lancaster, M.B.E., F.C.A., Chairman and Managing Director, Wolseley-Hughes Ltd; together with Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales; Mr Robert Browning, C.B.E., M.A., LL.B., C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland; Dr H. W. Robinson, PH.D., LL.B., F.C.A., President, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland; Mr G. L. Barker, F.A.C.C.A., President, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants; Mr J. P. Wilson, F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., President, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants; The Rt Hon. Lord Ritchie of Dundee, Chairman of the Council of The Stock Exchange; Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., Chairman of the Panel of Judges of The Accountant Annual Awards; and the following members of the Panel: Mr R. Adams, C.A.; Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A.; Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A.; Mr J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D.; Mr J. E. Harris, B.COM., F.A.C.C.A.; Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A.; Mr Hilary Scott; Sir Richard Yeabsley, C.B.E., F.C.A.; Mr Arthur E. Webb, Editor of The Accountant; and Mr Peter Chapman, Secretary of The Accountant Annual Awards.

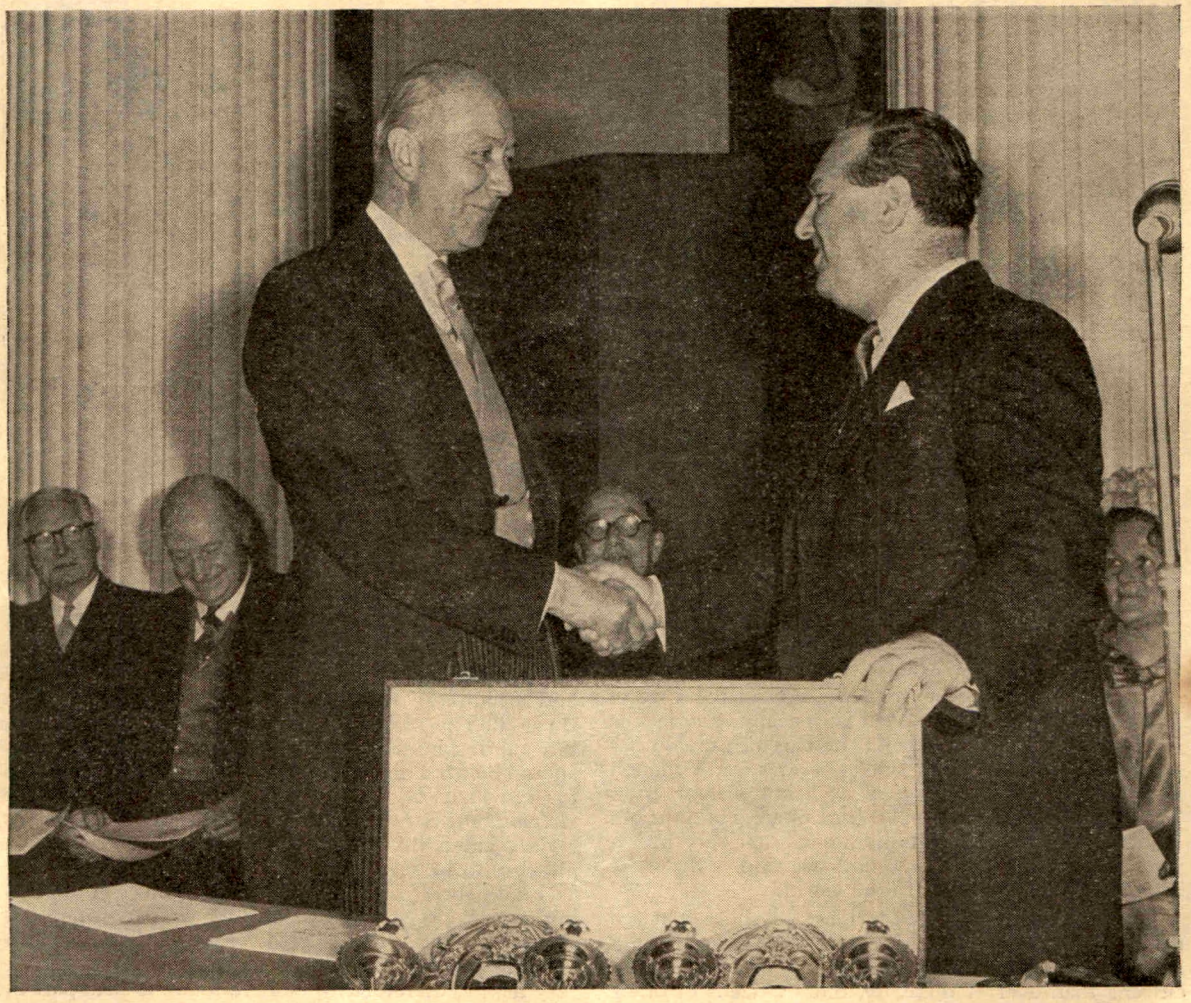
The names of those who accepted invitations appear on other pages.

The Chairman's Address

Opening the proceedings, Mr Hughes said:

'It is with very great pleasure that I welcome you all to the presentation of The Accountant Annual Awards for 1965 and, once again, the task of the Panel of Judges has not been easy. The increasingly high standard of the entries is, however, itself a difficulty for the Panel but I am conceited enough to believe that this very fact justifies the work which the members of the Panel do each year, often at considerable personal inconvenience and at no personal reward save that they believe that the task is worth while and in the general interest of the business community and the investing public.

'May I pay tribute at this point to the encouragement given to us by the Council of The Stock Exchange, under the chairmanship of Lord Ritchie of Dundee, who so kindly made our presentations last year and is with us today. Some months ago, the Council expressed its views on a number of matters affecting the accounts of companies and prospective investors. These are matters which we of The Accountant welcome. As I have said on previous occasions the form and wording of accounts and the supporting information is not something that is static once a particular standard has been reached. There are continually changing circumstances, and accounts and information relating thereto must continue to reflect these changes.



'Last year I had to express to you my sorrow at the sudden and untimely death of Kenneth Mackinnon, Q.C., who had been the Chairman of our Panel for five years and who had always shown such a keen interest in its work. I shall always be grateful to him. This year the Chairman has been my old friend, Roy Borneman, Q.C. On many occasions his lively mind has been at my service on one or other of our several endeavours and I was very pleased when, despite his very full life, he felt able to undertake this work. He has been most ably and loyally supported by the other members of the Panel who have remained unchanged from last year, being Mr R. Adams, C.A., The Hon. J. F. H. Baring, Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A., Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A., Mr J. E. Harris, B.COM., F.A.C.C.A., Mr J. A. Hunter, M.B.E., T.D., Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., Mr Hilary Scott, Sir Richard Yeabsley, C.B.E., F.C.A., and Mr Arthur Webb, Editor of The Accountant. I am once again grateful to them all and to the Secretary, Mr Peter Chapman. You will hear from Mr Borneman on the work of the Panel in a few moments.

'I am pleased that it has again been possible for the representatives of so many professional bodies to be with us and in particular Mr Guy Densem, President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Mr Robert Browning, President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, Dr H. W. Robinson, President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, Mr G. L. Barker, President of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, and Mr J. P. Wilson, President of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

'My Lord Mayor, may I express my thanks to you for consenting to present the Awards this year and also for making available to us this your official residence. My words are quite inadequate to express our appreciation but I assure you that they are sincere. I would like also to say how delighted we are that the Lady Mayoress is with us. Many tributes have been paid to you, my Lord Mayor, during your year of office as Lord Mayor of London and I do not expect to be able to add anything to them, but the enormous amount of time which you, and the Lady Mayoress, have devoted to civic affairs both here in this City of London and in the beautiful city which lies north of the border has been a source of wonder and great admiration to all with whom you have come in contact from Lands End to John o' Groats, but particularly in Edinburgh and London.

'My Lord Mayor, may I invite you to address us and then to make the formal presentations.'

The Lord Mayor (right) congratulates Sir Geoffrey Eley, Chairman of Thomas Tilling Ltd, on his company's achievement in winning an award.

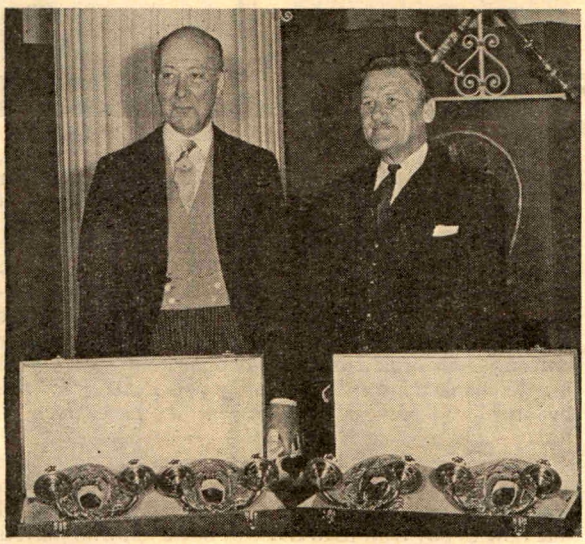
The Lord Mayor presents Mr N. G. Lancaster, Chairman of Wolseley-Hughes Ltd, with his company's award.

Lord Mayor of London's Remarks

Presenting the Awards, the Lord Mayor said:

'In the first place I would extend to you a very warm welcome to the Mansion House.

'It has been said that the prosperity of the City of London is built on trade. That is basically true but the prosperity and the standing of the City of London has been built on many other things besides trade, though trade has undoubtedly played an important part. Through the centuries the livery companies and the old guilds did their part in building up this City into a great trading city, and nowadays we find it the most important trading centre in the world.



'We have great City institutions. Of those that are involved in commerce and industry, their shareholding is spread on an ever-widening basis. There are more citizens than ever of this City, more citizens of other cities throughout the country, and more residents of other places throughout the country who are today shareholders in the big trading organizations and in the trading organizations that are not so big. These people receive their reports and accounts in due course, and it is, of course, basically essential that those reports and accounts should be good in their content – in what they tell. That, I think, is the most important function, but another important function is that those accounts should be presented in a way that is attractive, and in a form which is easily read and understood. The Accountant, by the inception of these Awards has greatly aided this objective. For that reason, it is a pleasure to be associated with this function.

'I have seen a little of the results of this competition in the past and certainly those of us who are interested will all freely admit the great progress that has been made in the presentation of company accounts. I am very happy, therefore, to be here today to take part in this ceremony and to present these very handsome Awards to the winning companies.' (Applause.)

Acknowledgements of the Presentations

Acknowledging the presentation made to his company, Sir Geoffrey Eley, C.B.E., Chairman of Thomas Tilling Ltd, said:

'It would be difficult for me to describe to you the delight and the excitement that broke out at Crewe House, our head office, when on April 3rd this year we received a letter saying that we had been awarded this prize. It is indeed something that I can say we worked for, we thought about, we have had at the back of our minds – something which my predecessor, Sir Lionel Fraser, whose signature is on the accounts and the report, and who in his own inimitable style produced the chairman's statement, had very near to his heart, and he would have been delighted to have known that his aim had been achieved. The mere fact that we have struggled for this Award, I think, is sufficient evidence of the usefulness of the role it is playing in company life now. I do not have any doubt at all that this has heightened the keenness with which the expert members of the staff of companies, who are concentrating on producing the accounts, set about their work, bully their chairman and seek advice from every possible source as to how they can improve the result.

'I would like to say a word of thanks and commiseration to the Panel of Judges, who I do feel perform a very useful service for us all, and it is a very severe stint they must be faced with. I have no doubt that a lot of elimination work is done before they get down to a short list, but even then I can see them having to do something rather like ploughing an asparagus bed with knitting needles, (laughter), for they have really got to select which is best and which is second best, and even then they must wonder. I only hope they get some benefit by finding they learn something about companies which enables them to invest wisely!

'We in Tillings, when we are drawing up our accounts, have several objectives in mind. The first one is probably very special to ourselves. We took quite a long time to eliminate from people's minds that Tillings were a bus company. (Laughter.) It is quite a long time ago but you will be surprised how these things linger. Then we have the problem – certainly for the past three or four years – of introducing to our shareholders what is in many respects a new company, because we grow all the time and we grow in all sorts of different directions. There are thirty companies in the Tilling Group and we have 30,000 shareholders. It is quite a job marrying these two figures together.

'What we are after is, first of all, clearly and simply to inform a lay shareholder of what is going on and what he owns; secondly, we aim to provide what is needed for the professional shareholder, or the financial paper analyst or the institutional back-room adviser. We have to try and avoid what is not essential, and with a slight thought at the back of our minds occasionally, naturally, as to what might be of value to a competitor in one of the fields in which we operate; but it is a slight thought because in general we believe that the more publicity, the more knowledge we let in, the better it is for us and our shareholders and the whole economic society of which we form a part.

'We also try to eliminate what is boring; or if it has to be put in, we put it in small print. (Laughter.) I am really referring to statutory requirements which we all have to cope with and which many of us regret, but there we are.

'All these problems of Tillings are attended to by a committee. The committee starts work quite early on in the year and far ahead of the date of publication. It receives suggestions from the subsidiary companies, from the auditors, from any shareholders who write in, from members of the headquarters staff. It operates under the leadership of Mr Ballantine, our secretary and chief accountant. He is here today with several of his principal assistants, and I would like to mention his name especially as having played a major role in constructing the form of accounts we have now and in suggesting ways in which they could be improved. I would like to thank them all and all the people who have put in suggestions to them.

'Finally, I would like to thank The Accountant very much indeed for this magnificent pair of sconces and say that we have one idea in our mind, and that is to be the first company to win this Award twice.' (Applause.)

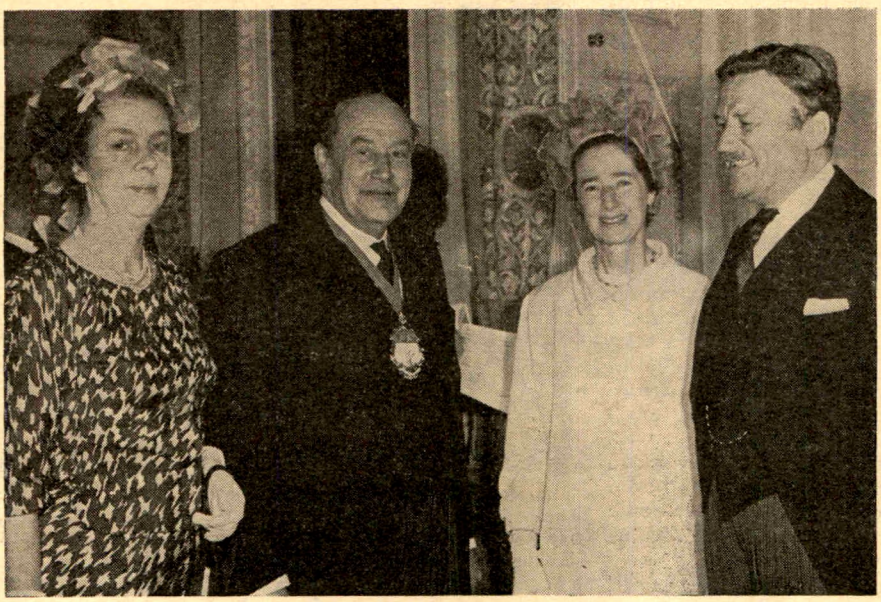
Mr N. G. Lancaster, M.B.E., F.C.A., Chairman of Wolseley-Hughes Ltd, in acknowledging the presentation made to his company, said:

'Mark Twain once remarked, "Get your facts first and then distort them as much as you please". Now in Wolseley-Hughes we take the first part of that advice, but when it comes to the facts we think it wholly beneficial and advantageous to publish quite a large number of them. In the first place, it is a stimulus to ourselves, the executive, the management, to do better; secondly, to inform shareholders about the company in which they have been good enough to invest; thirdly, as a help to our own employees to understand better the many financial problems of business; and, fourthly and quite definitely, to help the investment analysts, city editors, stockbrokers and investors generally to do their very important work in assessing the affairs of companies.



'We embarked in 1961 on this policy of publishing a lot more information than is strictly necessary by law, and we did so, to quite a large extent, as a result of this competition which I think has done so much to help accountants. The first major step we took was to adopt the single column of figures presentation of Unilever, the style they pioneered when they won the Award several years ago. Now we have won the Award and we are very proud to have done so. We are very pleased and very delighted.

Mr Robert Browning, C.B.E., M.A., LL.B., C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland (right), with Mr A. S. H. Dicker, M.B.E., F.C.A. (centre), and Mr W. G. Campbell, B.A., F.C.A., members of the Panel of Judges.

'The sponsors of this competition have done immensely good work in improving the whole presentation of accounts in the country – there is no doubt about that – and we should like to congratulate them on their enterprise in organizing this competition. We would like to thank them most sincerely and heartily for the beautiful and very valuable prizes they have given us today.

'As Sir Geoffrey has stated, the preparation of the annual report and accounts of a public company is a team effort – certainly not a one-man job, and I should like now to pay tribute to those of our team who played the major part. First, Mr Roy Woodward, our Finance Director. He has been imaginative, constructive and most diligent, and his ability and enthusiasm have undoubtedly brought the best out of others. Our auditors and our printers have been exceptionally helpful and skilful in their work, and lastly I should like to thank my own colleagues on our main board for their indulgence to the accountants and encouragement to the accountants on the one hand, and for all their good work and advice. I notice they are specially enthusiastic in their work when correcting the English in my first draft reports. One feels then something of the spirit abroad that Oscar Wilde expressed so accurately when he said: "On an occasion of that kind it becomes more than a moral duty to speak one's mind, it becomes a pleasure". (Laughter.) I would like to end by thanking The Accountant very sincerely on behalf of my company for this wonderful Award.' (Applause.)

Panel Chairman's Comments

In his comments on the work of the Panel, Mr Roy Borneman, Q.C., Chairman of the Panel of Judges, said:

'As this is the first year of my chairmanship of the Panel I may perhaps be permitted two short personal comments. First, it is to me a great honour to follow as chairman of the Panel my three predecessors, all of whom I knew well. The first, Montagu Gedge, was the acknowledged leader of the company law Bar who added to a shrewd, analytical mind a boisterous Peter Pan approach to even the most serious cases, which was to say the least disconcerting to a young junior such as I was when we first met. J. B. Lindon, his successor, was a man in different mould altogether; a deep thinker, who after a conference liked nothing better than to discuss at length Shakespearean first folios. Kenneth Mackinnon, the last chairman, was a personal friend of mine. We so to speak grew up together, he having been called to the Bar only a few years before me. He was a dedicated man whose views on the application of company law were honoured in the City quite apart from his membership of the Jenkins Committee.

'I count it a great privilege to have been invited to follow these three.

'Secondly, may I take this opportunity of thanking my colleagues on the Panel for the many concentrated hours they devoted to the consideration of the accounts submitted for this year's Awards. There were almost 1,250 entries and even after the preliminary screening, many meetings of the Panel were necessary to decide the final winners. Every member of the Panel brought a vigorous mind to bear on the various points which arose, and the accountants on the Panel in particular gave the others of us a sharp lesson in how charmingly accountants can agree to disagree – even if on occasion we others didn't agree with any of them. (Laughter.)

'The choice of the two accounts to take the Awards this year was a difficult one – as usual – and on behalf of the Panel I offer both companies our congratulations. But if only in recognition of the thought and care which clearly went into the production of so many of the accounts submitted, we think it proper this year to tell you that although Thomas Tilling Ltd was the winner among the large companies, Brooke Bond & Co Ltd and The Chloride Electrical Storage Co Ltd were in it to the end. Wolseley-Hughes Ltd was a clear winner among the smaller companies, but Alenco Ltd survived for a long time.

'Last year in announcing the Awards, mention was made of several points which came to the notice of the Panel in considering the accounts – points which in their view detracted from the merits of many of the accounts submitted. We do not propose to add to the list this year because there is another matter which must be given preference. In August 1964 Lord Ritchie of Dundee, the Chairman of the Council of The Stock Exchange, sent a letter to chairmen of companies setting out recommendations of his Council with regard to the information which should be made available to shareholders of public quoted companies.

'This next year we shall watch with care how far various companies have adopted these recommendations, although I would add – and I am sure that Lord Ritchie would agree – that there may be good reasons why the recommendations or some of them, are not slavishly followed in all cases. While, therefore, we hope that the majority of companies will follow Lord Ritchie's recommendations, we shall not hold it against a company that not all of them have been adopted, particularly where we can discern good reason from the company's point of view why they should not'. (Applause.)

Whither the I.M.T.A.?

SIR, – It was with great interest that I read the leader in your issue of May 8th, on the Dickerson report.

As a serving local government officer, I found your remarks concerning the recruitment of accountants into local government particularly relevant. A large number of authorities when advertising for staff insist on applicants having the I.M.T.A. qualification and ignore candidates holding qualifications of the major bodies, irrespective of the fact that they may have a local government or comparable background.

There has never appeared to me to be any good reason for this narrow attitude in the public service and the Dickerson report has come up with no argument to support this. In fact, on page 24 of the report it stated that, 'Many members of the I.M.T.A. feel that more of them [other accountants] would have done so but for the fact that, on the whole, treasurers have convinced their employing authorities that a qualification other than the I.M.T.A. is not an appropriate alternative to accounting work in local government.' It would be interesting to know how such treasurers arrived at these conclusions and one wonders whether they can honestly say that such an attitude is one of considered judgement rather than of ill-considered prejudice.

Whether one agrees with the Dickerson report or not, one cannot help feeling that the I.M.T.A. is at the cross-roads not only in recruitment and training but also in the place it is to occupy in the accountancy world. Unless there is a radical change in thinking, the I.M.T.A. will probably continue as the 'little sister' in the profession and in the event of any amalgamations could well be left out in the cold. On the other hand, by a positive approach towards closer co-operation with other bodies, by encouraging its members to refrain from discriminatory advertisements, by encouraging members of other bodies with suitable experience to join its ranks by direct admission, the I.M.T.A. could establish itself in the main stream of the profession. Time alone will give us the answer.

Yours faithfully,
LOCAL GOVERNMENT OFFICER
(A member of the I.M.T.A.)

SIR, – Your leading article in the issue of May 8th is as interesting for what is not said as for what is – particularly the references in the last half-column to the alternative methods of recruitment of accounting staff open to the local authorities and the incidence of the cost of one of them as being 'largely at the ratepayers' expense'. But there is nothing new in this – it applies, only far more so, in the Civil Service.

Although the Civil Service has a professional accountant class, its members are restricted in the main to a narrow range of duties concerned with special cost and financial investigations; they are not allowed to play a part in departmental accounting, A.D.P., financial control, or audit. All these duties are performed by executive class staff, trained at the taxpayers' expense though usually lacking any 'professional' tag. The executives, having the jobs, effectively bar the professional accountants and in so doing prevent the accountants from using their talents to the full in their employers' – the country's – interests. There is an important side effect for the accountants concerned, in that qualified accountants are paid less than the unqualified executives, e.g. senior executive officers' maximum – £2,250; senior accountants' maximum – £2,165.

The accountancy bodies have largely withheld support from the Civil Service accountants in their fight for proper recognition, status and pay. Why? Is it because of a 'penurious articled clerk' mentality that the majority of practitioners view with horror the payment of proper salaries to employed accountants?

Is it not long overdue for the accountancy bodies to put their full weight behind their members in central and local government with a view to ensuring that trained professional minds are performing, and in particular controlling, the full range of accounting duties in government and local government, and that they are properly paid for so doing? Unless positive, speedy and sustained effort is given to this and other related problems, the plum jobs will continue to go to other bodies and 'no-bodies' as is already happening in the fields of consultancy, O. & M., and A.D.P.

Yours faithfully,
PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANT (A.A.C.C.A.)

The Finance Bill

SIR, – The leading article in your issue of May 1st gave a good summary at short notice of the main provisions of the new proposals. There are, however, one or two other points to be noted:

(1) The abatement provisions for profits tax, of course, applied to the whole of the tax. The new proposals do not give exemption from corporation tax itself.

(2) The new definition of 'close companies' does not apparently exclude public companies, so that even these will apparently be subject to income tax directions. I wonder what the Stock Exchange thinks of this?

(3) I calculate a company's profit and earnings positions as follows:

	Profit	Tax
Earnings	100	Nil
Corporation tax ..	40	40
	60
Dividend 60% × £60 ..	36 @ 8s 3d	14·85
	24	54·85
Capital gains tax, ultimately 30% × £24 ..	7·2	7·2
	£16·8	£62·05

It would appear that there may be considered to be a contingent liability building up either on a company or its shareholders, of either capital gains tax or dividend tax on the amounts placed to reserve.

(4) It seems that discretionary trusts are also attacked under the new Bill. Trustees will apparently have to pay capital gains tax on revaluation every ten years from the anniversary of the setting up of the trust and will be charged on accrued gains as well as realized gains. Is there any other branch of tax law or, for that matter, are there any other countries in which tax is chargeable on unrealized surpluses?

Yours faithfully,
Manchester 2. J. ROSS, F.C.A.

Romford and District Chartered Accountants' Group

SIR, – There is a keen interest for the formation of a Romford and District Group of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants to take in an approximate circular area covering Hornchurch, Dagenham, Barking, Ilford, Loughton, Epping, Brentwood and Grays, with Romford at the centre, and it is hoped that, through your columns, it may be possible to get in touch with chartered accountants living or working in the area to whom circulars have not been sent and who would be interested in giving support to the group.

Initially a circular has been sent out to all members practising in the area and an inaugural meeting is to be arranged but in the meantime any interested persons should communicate with the writer. It is hoped that it will be possible to publish in your columns the date on which the inaugural meeting will be held.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

EIGHTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING

THE Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales held its eighty-fourth annual meeting on May 12th at Church House, Westminster, London SW1, under the chairmanship of the President, Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A.

Mr Densem delivered the address reproduced in last week's issue of The Accountant. He then proposed the adoption of the report of the Council and the accounts for the year ended December 31st, 1964. This was seconded by the Vice-President, Mr R. McNeil, F.C.A., and the meeting was opened for discussion.

DISCUSSION

Mr F. A. J. Couldery, F.C.A. (Brighton): Mr President, I rise on the Finance Bill, 1965. This has been aptly described in Parliament as a Hungarian Rhapsody. Nuttall's Dictionary defines a rhapsody as a rambling composition composed in an excited or confused state of mind.

This Bill would be farcical, if it were not so serious. The volume and complexity of the work which falls upon practising accountants has increased every year for many years and we have now reached the stage where I and many of my fellow members throughout the country are working at maximum output for very long hours and are still unable to keep abroast of the load of work, most of which comes from the Inland Revenue.

Taxation, as we all know, has now become such a jungle that even our most intelligent clients do not attempt to understand what it is all about. We are faced not only with the continual burden of having to explain to the taxpayer what the Revenue require, but with having to explain also to the Revenue what the taxpayer has done. We swim in a sea of forms, all bearing the threats of penalties for late submission. Without our co-operation the Inland Revenue would grind to a halt within a few months.

The political aspects of this Bill are of no concern of mine, or indeed of this meeting. If the Government wishes to increase taxes, this by itself does not necessarily make our lives more difficult as practising accountants. What I do beseech of the Council, however, is that their energies should be directed whole-heartedly in negotiations with the Inland Revenue to make the life of an ordinary chartered accountant in practice at least bearable. There have been some suggestions in the Press in the last month that we accountants should welcome the Finance Bill since it will bring a great deal of profitable work our way. These suggestions are ludicrous. The only things which the Finance Bill is likely to bring us are peptic ulcers or nervous breakdowns.

I fully appreciate that every year the Council has submitted informative and intelligent memoranda to successive Chancellors of the Exchequer pleading for clarity and simplicity in making new laws. There remain, however, innumerable matters which practising members are increasingly dissatisfied about in the present administration of the tax law. I do not wish to take the time of this meeting to go into details, but to identify briefly some of the points which I have in mind:

Could not the Inland Revenue make available to us their own handbook on tax law?

Could not Form 1 for companies be abolished?

Could not investment allowance certificates at least be standardized?

Could not the P11D be abolished where the expenses have been fully discussed in the course of dealing with the account?

Could not the Inland Revenue accept our signature on many of the little forms, to avoid further correspondence with clients to obtain their signatures?

And what on earth is the Board of Inland Revenue now trying to make out of the Law Shipping case? My local inspector argues that if one buys a second-hand motor-car, the first renewal of brakes, clutch, tyres, battery and silencer is strictly capital expense at least in part.

Mr President, this is the annual general meeting of our Institute and not a time to go into great details affecting only a minority of our members, being those in practice. I feel that there is an urgent need to call a special meeting of our Institute to discuss the matters which affect the practising accountant in his relations with the Inland Revenue.

Last Friday, I circularized 300 members of our Institute who are in practice to ascertain their views and seek their support in calling for a National meeting. I have, Mr President, many of the one hundred signatures necessary under bye-law 94 to requisition such a meeting, but I do not feel it is for the members to requisition such a meeting, but rather for the Council to call it of their own volition. I can only repeat that I am not concerned one jot with the political aspects of the present Bill. If the Chancellor is determined to have up to 26*s* 3*d* in the £ total tax on some companies' profits, as appears likely from the present Finance Bill, then this is not our concern as accountants. What surely is our concern, however, is that our members should not collapse through nervous breakdowns, overwork or worry. Even if 98 per cent of our members can stand this killing pace, I am sure that 2 per cent of us cannot, and the cost of 225 chartered accountants as a human sacrifice every year is to my mind too great a price to pay.

Mr B. V. Piggott, F.S.A.A. (Ipswich): Mr President, I should like to say a few words regarding incorporated accountants. You will recall that, at the annual meeting in 1964, I put forward a motion designed to grant them the same designation, rights and obligations as chartered accountant members. After discussion at the meeting, this motion was, with the consent of your predecessor, withdrawn from the vote. It was understood that I should resubmit the motion to the annual meeting today, when it was anticipated that proxy voting would be available.

Members may have been surprised, therefore, that there was no motion in my name on the agenda. The reason for this is to be found in the statement by the Council which was published on March 13th, 1965, and appears in paragraph 16 of the Annual Report. This statement is the outline of proposals which the Council will make to members at the special meeting to be held on September 23rd, 1965, for the redesignation of the present incorporated accountant members as chartered accountants.

I welcome this action which the Council is taking, arising from their reconsideration of the matter during the past year. It is a major step forward which will enhance further the high professional standing and reputation of our Institute.

It is clear that the effect of these proposals will be to solve the problem for nearly every incorporated accountant. Further, the provisions in respect of those few not automatically entitled to redesignation are made slightly easier.

Nevertheless, I regret that any exception should be made in the scheme for redesignation as chartered accountants.

We shall have again a very small proportion of members whose professional qualification has lost it cachet. I have wrestled very hard with my conscience on this point.

I am aware that the fundamental principles regarding practising accountants which are the basis of the Council's policy are reflected in these proposals and that the Council has gone a long way to meet the objects which I have been seeking to achieve since 1957. It follows that some compromise must be accepted and I have decided that it is right and proper for me to support the scheme which is set out in the statement published on March 13th.

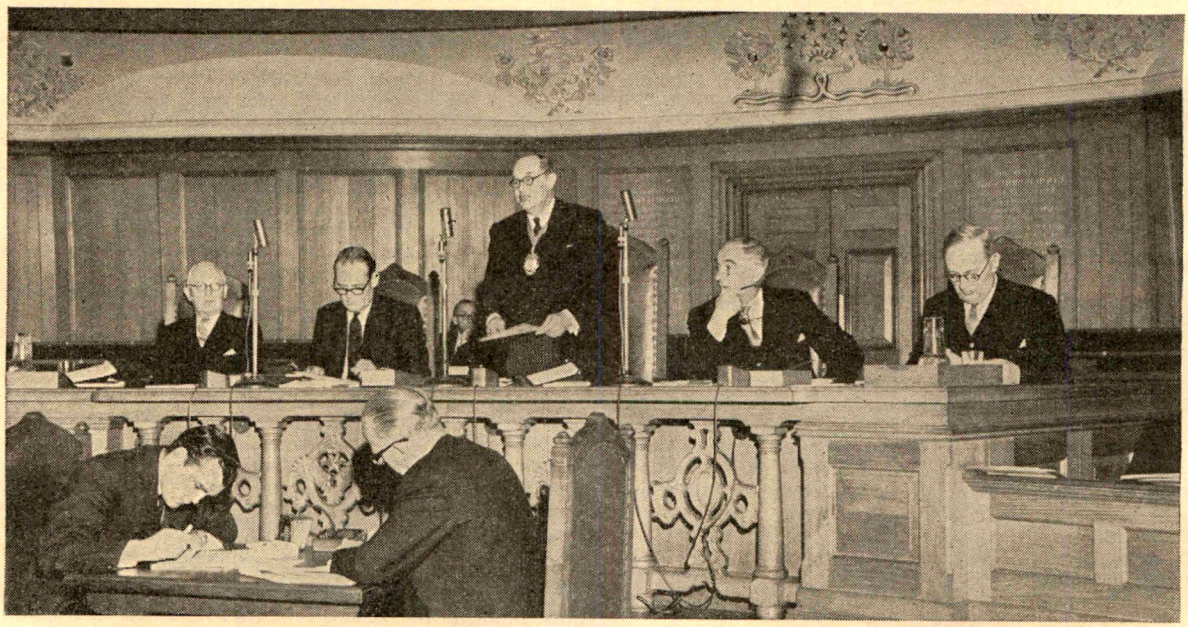
As you are aware, Mr President, I represent over six hundred incorporated accountant members with whom I am in touch from time to time. A large number of these have written to me recently, expressing their appreciation of the proposals made by the Council. I can speak, therefore, on behalf of a large proportion of those affected in welcoming the scheme for their redesignation.

The members of the Institute will have an opportunity to vote when they complete their instructions on the proxy forms before the special general meeting takes place on September 23rd. I ask them to remember that the proposals, which will be before them at that stage in precise detail, are a scheme designed by their Council to remedy a problem facing a minority of members, and that the minority concerned are in agreement with that scheme.

In conclusion, Mr President, I am very glad that, instead of needing myself to move a Resolution at this meeting, I am in a position to express my appreciation of the initiative taken by the Council regarding incorporated accountant members and I hope that all members will join me in saying 'thank you' by endorsing the Council's recommendation at the September meeting.

Mr W. E. Bason, F.C.A. (Hitchin): Mr President, as one who has attended, first as an incorporated accountant who qualified in 1927, district meetings and also meetings of the Society, and then, after qualifying as a chartered accountant in 1945, district and Institute meetings, and having remembered what was told me by an incorporated accountant when I first took up articles and which I repeated at a meeting some years ago, namely, that 'Sooner or later, there is bound to be a merger between the Institute and the Society', I have always given full support to the integration scheme. But one sad thing has remained in my mind; the unfortunate group of incorporated accountants to which Mr Piggott has referred today.

At the last annual general meeting I pleaded with the Council in my small way – I am only a small practitioner – to reconsider this matter, for the few incorporated accountants who were the Cinderellas of the merger between the Institute and the Society.



On this glowing early summer morning, one particularly glowing section in this report, although there are other things which command a similar feeling, is paragraph 16. I am glad to hear what Mr Piggott has said here today, and I, as an ordinary member of the Institute, congratulate the Council on the way in which they have tackled this problem.

Mr D. J. Calder, A.C.A. (London): I practice in St Marylebone. I should like, Mr President, to refer to one or two matters more domestic than those which so far have been canvassed this morning.

The Council have circulated to us a paper on the cost of administration of the Benevolent Association. I do not want to discuss the Benevolent Association as such, but there are certain things which are apparent which started my mind thinking on more general lines.

We collect in the Benevolent Association some £14,000 in subscriptions. That is a disgracefully low sum. But I am quite horrified to find that in running the Benevolent Association as beautifully as it is no doubt run, we spend 50 per cent of our subscriptions on administration. I suggest that that is an expense ratio which would make even a football promoter wince!

It is really a bit worse than that. According to the report we have dealt with some one hundred and forty-five cases in the Association. That means that we have spent nearly £50 on every case in administering it. Of the 145 cases, it appears that some forty-five of them – I have made a rough count – benefit to the extent of £50 a year or less. It seems to me that that is entirely out of scale.

These thoughts prompted me to look at some other items in our accounts. I did express some years ago my views on the necessity or desirability of constructing some grand new central premises, and the policy that has been adopted was not the one that I then advocated. We are undoubtedly now lumbered with a scheme which will cost a great deal of money, the amount of which no man at present can tell, nor can we foretell when we are going to be allowed to spend it. While this has been going on, we have, perforce, moved into what are called 'temporary premises'.

Many of you were probably as astonished as I was, because there is not a word in the report to explain that, having spent £11,000 in 1963 on the removal of equipment to these premises, we have spent another £40,000 this year.

I think this is quite astonishing. 'Removal of equipment to temporary premises' I think are the words used in the accounts. Whether this is what used to be called 'folie de grandeur' I do not know. In St Marylebone we have another word for it – bonkers!

I do not for one moment blame the Council that this sort of thing goes on. I think in this day and age we have reached the stage when perhaps we ought to take a long, very hard look not only at what we do and why we do it, but how we do it and who does it. I think we may be moving to the stage where our day-to-day organization should be looked after for us by a full, permanent staff, headed by a director-general. I am not sure that this proliferation of committees that we have apparently now embarked on is not getting rather like a Labour Government; more chartered accountants are going to be on the committees than are supporting from the benches.

I do not want to appear critical of the Council. As people, they are all very eminent members of our profession and they are all obviously very able men. The last plea I would make is that perhaps they would always take their ability as well as their eminence to meetings of the Institute.

Mr J. C. Lewis, A.C.A. (Brighton): Mr President, I whole-heartedly agree with all that Mr Couldery has said regarding the Finance Bill. Although I have only been in practice for two years I have found to my personal cost that the more one gives in to the Inland Revenue, the more one is abused.

I feel that the Institute has found itself in this unfortunate position over its representations to the Treasury. I should like to ask that more positive action be taken and I would add my voice to that of Mr Couldery in calling for a national meeting so that we accountants can air our views and try if possible to lighten the burden which has fallen upon us.

Mr J. Clayton, F.C.A. (Cheam): Mr President, I rise more in sorrow than anger to voice a criticism of one of the documents appended to the Annual Report. I refer to the memorandum, submitted in January last, to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, regarding corporation tax and capital gains tax, and particularly to paragraph 29 thereof, as reproduced on page 89 of the report.

I could hardly believe my own eyes when I read such an irresponsible plea by the Council for tax concessions for the beneficiaries of inflation, at the expense of its victims; and one based on such a travesty of fact.

It is a grave and saddening negation of that objectivity that has hitherto animated the work of the Council. Moreover, it confirms the suspicion that there is now a powerful caucus on the Council, determined to undermine and supplant the principles set forth in Recommendation 15, with its warning against cooking the books in order to minimize inflationary profits – which are now even denied altogether.

Let me, therefore, give a simple example of the reality of inflationary profits. On the latest available information, the aggregate book value of the tangible assets of quoted limited companies (other than banking and insurance) is approximately £14000 million, and their prior charges are £3700 million. Each year, therefore, inflation results in a capital loss of some £150 million to the prior charge-holders – with a corresponding capital gain to the equity shareholders.

Even more striking is the effect of inflation on life assurance companies. The interests of the policy holders, amounting to some £7,000 million, are being constantly eroded by inflation – to the benefit of the shareholders and, ironically, of future policy holders.

But perhaps the most vivid illustration of the untenable nature of the Council's formula is attained by comparing the overall effects of inflation, on the one hand on the owners of the National tangible assets, and, on the other, on the holders of the National Debt.

The current replacement value of the National tangible assets is some £120,000 million, and its annual net accretion due to inflation is of the order of £3,000 million, whereof the Chancellor hopes to collect some £150 million per annum, by means of his new capital gains tax – a rate of tax on the total annual capital accretion (both realized and unrealized) of 5 per cent, or one-third of the average rate of taxation on income tax.

On the other hand, the holders of the National Debt of approximately £30,000 million are fully taxed on their annual income of some £1,200 million despite an annual capital loss, due to inflation, of a like amount; the most shocking feature of this is the expropriation, at the rate of some £300 million per annum, of those who have been induced, by the National Savings Campaign, to save and lend their savings to the Government.

The application of the Council's new formula would substantially reduce – indeed wellnigh eliminate – the proposed tax on capital gains, without in any way ameliorating the unhappy lot of the holders of the National Debt and of other fixed-interest securities.

My personal view is that it is highly dangerous to advocate tax concessions for one category of taxpayer, without carefully considering the whole tax conspectus. If, however, the Council feels that some special tax relief is called for to mitigate the effects of inflation, it should surely be afforded to those living on fixed incomes – the victims of inflation.

But to espouse a formula for the virtual elimination of the proposed capital gains tax – and thereby impose an additional tax burden on the victims of inflation – is a sad and unhappy departure from those standards of objectivity which we have so long cherished.

Mr President, I do hope that in any further submission to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on this matter, the Council – despite the natural aversion we all have to new taxes – will avoid such tendentious and subjective advocacy of tax concessions for the beneficiaries of inflation at the expense of its victims.

A member: Mr President, it seems these days that any proposal by the Council is more than likely to be passed. It is therefore very important that we should ask how these proposals come about in the first place, where they start in the Council and who in the Council is prepared to say 'no'.

In paragraph 9 of the report it is stated: 'The expansion of the activities of the Institute in recent years has resulted in a substantial increase in the burden of work carried out . . .'. We are promised an increase in the size of the Council, an increase in the number of members co-opted, and an increase in the subscription.

If you read this report to find out where all the money and energy are directed, you come across a lot of things that have been passed by the Institute in general meeting over the past fifty years – a lot of proposals that one may have even voted for, or certainly not against.

For example, the Members' Handbook, which comes in two large volumes. This is, I would think, judging from questions I have asked other practising accountants, very little used and very useless, besides costing thousands of pounds. Together with the Research Committee, it has cost about £40,000 this year.

The handbook contains some 'gems of information', such as, in the paragraph under auditing, 'The auditors will compare the profit and loss account and balance sheet with the books and records in order to see whether they are in accordance therewith'. It says in the section on internal control that there should be safeguards to minimize the risk of interception of mail between receipt and opening. This is what we were articled to learn. We do not want to be told again.

'The arrangement for controlling payments will depend to a great extent on the nature of business transacted, the volume of payments involved and the size of the company'. Is this what we are paying thousands of pounds for, and why the subscriptions have to go up?

Then we take the Articled Clerks Committee. You now have the situation – and this was voted on – that if a new partner joins a practice with six other partners, which has been established for a large number of years, he has to go before a committee to see whether he is a fit person to have an articled clerk. Who in the committee thinks that one person in a partnership of seven is going to be responsible for one articled clerk of his own? In fact it is the responsibility of the partnership.

We have another example where it seems to me that the Council do not in fact know what happens in practice. We have now got to the stage when we are told how much study an articled clerk should have. We have announcements that where the Final examination is taken in two parts, an articled clerk gets one month's study leave before each part, but where the examination is taken all together, he must have twice as much study leave as he would have had if he had sat for one examination at a time. It gets so complicated that I feel they have to have legal opinion on it. It seems ridiculous.

Then come the district societies. The report proudly states that membership has gone up by 40 per cent. We all know that is because the subscription has been waived. I wonder if the attendance has gone up? I am one of the guilty; I joined the London District Society by filling in a piece of paper because it was put in front of me. I still take no interest in its proceedings, which may or may not be right. But it is a lot of money that we are spending on district societies.

The real tragedy is not the cost, not the effort that is wasted. What is the tragedy is that more is not done in the ways in which it should be done, and we have heard a very good example today. You have heard people speak up about the Finance Bill. Where, in the papers that we have seen, have the Council told the general public as well as the Revenue just what they thought of the administrative difficulties of the Budget?

I should like to ask you (I am not sure how you are going to conduct this) but are you going to give an answer to Mr Couldery, and the others? Is it really necessary for us to go to the expense of having a special meeting, or will the Council tell us just what they are proposing to do?

Mr A. P. Hughes, F.C.A. (London): Mr President, the last speaker unfortunately omitted to give us his name, otherwise the London District should have been delighted to have renewed their efforts to persuade him to attend our meetings.

All I should like to say is this: I do admire the fact that his knowledge of the Institute's pronouncements is such that he can get by without the Members' Handbook. As a harassed practising member, I do not know where I would be without it. (hear, hear.)

He says he would like to know to what extent the London District attendances have gone up. They are rising, but it is up to the members themselves to make them rise. I think all districts – I am speaking particularly for London – but all districts are doing their utmost to encourage members to come to district meetings, branch meetings and group meetings. It is felt that the only way the Institute can go on as a living organism, expanding with the varying, complicated problems that we have to face, is for members to get together in relatively small groups and discuss these problems, to put things forward to their district societies and then to the Institute itself.

Mr T. D. G. Kelly, F.C.A. (Warwick): Mr President, I should like to express my support for what Mr Hughes has just said, and to assure you and the Council that the penultimate speaker has not aired my views, or indeed the views of the vast majority of people in Warwickshire. We have the greatest regard for what the Council are doing. They are doing an exceedingly difficult job, not made any easier by carping criticisms from people who are not prepared to read the Institute's Recommendations or the Institute's Handbook, or even, on some occasions apparently, the Finance Bill!

Mr A. J. Curry, F.C.A. (London): Mr President, may I make one or two comments arising from the Institute's accounts? First of all, as far as the building development is concerned, I welcome any gleanings of information which we are given about this, although it seems that we only hear in retrospect.

Can we be informed, for example, of what the estimated building cost might be. We are told that we shall have to borrow the money in order to finance it, but I feel at some stage there must be a call for funding of this debt. How is this going to affect subscriptions?

One further comment on the financing of these buildings. I see that our income from investment is yielding about 4 per cent gross, whereas I should imagine that we are paying approximately double that to the bank. Is there a good reason for this, I wonder?

A comment on the cost of administering certain aspects of our work – I feel this breakdown into functions is very useful. There is one thing which to my mind stands out. We read in the report that the Disciplinary Committee, apart from dealing with subscriptions in arrears, has dealt with a dozen cases during the year. I see the instances given are a complete record and not an abstract. The cost of running this committee it seems is more than £1,000 per case dealt with.

Mr B. J. M. Boys, F.C.A. (London): Mr President, I have not, unfortunately, been able to make quite so exhaustive a study of the accounts as some of the members today. It did seem to me on a very brief glance that there is one point which has not been mentioned and which touches upon what the last speaker said. There has been a drop of £55,000 in the value of our investments. So it does not look as if we are likely to get tied up in capital gains for the time being!

I see, Sir, that it is expected that we are going to have a very large deficit this year, and perhaps as a result, I shall get the answer to the question which I raised on the 1962 accounts, as to whether it is really correct to try and move a hole, rather than fill it up. I see that one way of filling the hole is that you propose to increase our subscriptions once more. I do hope your successor will not have to be called before Mr Aubrey Jones's committee!

Mr R. G. Buchanan-Torrance, F.C.A. (Blandford, Dorset): Mr President, may I refer to the Benevolent Association for a moment? You have a large audience now and it will not be so large, I am sure, for the Benevolent Association meeting.

The President: Well, as long as you are brief.

Mr Buchanan-Torrance: We have approximately forty thousand members of the Institute. The subscribers to the Benevolent Association are approximately five thousand two hundred. I may be quite wrong, and I will humbly apologize if I am, but I venture to suggest when the Benevolent meeting starts we will be very fortunate if a quarter of the those present now are there. I do not suppose many of us will anticipate being on National Assistance.

When you think some of our members – it may not be their own fault – are on National Assistance, surely a modest £1 1s covenant a year from those who could afford it would not do any harm? (hear, hear.)

Mr S. Kitchen, F.C.A. (Birmingham): I am rather surprised Mr President, having listened to all these criticisms of Council, which I think are all very healthy, that there has not been more support for the remarks of the first speaker.

I think that having myself spent not a little time endeavouring to unravel the complexities of the Finance Bill I have every sympathy with those of us who are going to have to operate its requirements over the next few years.

Those who have spent very little time on it will find that it is so horrible and so ghastly that I have every sympathy with the viewpoint which was put forward by the first speaker. I am horrified as to how we as a profession are in fact going to cope with it in our own offices. I do not think we are seeing the beginning of the complexities in which it is going to involve us, but these are going to be alike for the Civil Servants, who represent the Inland Revenue, and I think we must be equally sympathetic to their task.

The decisions which are imposed upon us are political ones. I as a member feel it would be very wrong if the Council of the Institute in any way became involved in decisions or arguments of a political nature. While I have the utmost sympathy with the viewpoints put forward by the first speaker, I cannot see the practical point of calling an extraordinary general meeting which will waste more of the Institute's funds, and some members seem a little disturbed about this, without being able to achieve any real objective. I think those who are supporting the calling of an extraordinary general meeting should consider what it is likely to achieve.

The President: Well, ladies and gentlemen, if there are no further questions I will try and deal with one or two of the points that have been raised – I am not going to attempt to deal with the whole lot.

I should like to thank the two members who expressed appreciation of the Council's proposal with regard to incorporated accountant members. We do hope this is going to resolve a problem which has been worrying the Council for a very long time and we trust these proposals will really solve this problem.

Obviously, Moorgate Place redevelopment is something of a problem in view of the possible delay, which we hope will not be long, in getting a permit to build. We have not got really firm estimates and I am not going to throw out figures of what the cost of demolition and construction will be. Such rough estimates as we have been given do indicate that it is a very sensible move on the part of the Institute, through its Council, to establish itself in a reasonable freehold headquarters in the City. We must be in the City. The present temporary buildings are very inconvenient in many ways. The offices themselves may not be too inefficient and are reasonably confortable, except that we have not got a proper Council Chamber and we have to go outside for Council meetings. However, the situation is wrong and we want to get back as soon as we can to the City.

I would point out that we only moved at the end of March 1964 and the £40,000 appearing in last year's accounts reflect the large amount of work done by the contractors in the first three months of the year converting some empty floors into offices. Partitioning is an expensive matter, but, of course, it is of a fairly permanent nature. I trust there is no great feeling that we were extravagant in spending only £40,000 in fitting ourselves out. Obviously we had to do that because we had to move somewhere. It was not that we moved from Moorgate Place – we moved from another leased property where it was not a reasonable proposition to renew the lease.

I am not going to get myself involved in arguments about the amount of work falling on practitioners and members in industry owing to the complications of the proposed taxation legislation. All I would say is that the Council cannot rush in and make pronouncements without very careful consideration. One of the things that I, as President, would very much hesitate to do would be to say that we as a profession are incapable of dealing with this. It may be very hard work and very onerous, but to throw in one's hand and say we cannot do it is surely not building a very good image for the profession. I would have thought – as I said in my address to you – that this is a burden we have to shoulder. We do not welcome it and we agree that it is a burden, but we just have to do our best.

Regarding the Disciplinary Committee – we must of course have such a committee. Cases that come before it are gone into very carefully. A vast amount of work has to go on in the Institute to keep everything running smoothly with a membership of nearly forty thousand. Some members do stray from the path and they have to be brought back. We have to be very careful that we are dealing fairly with them, and we have to maintain some sort of organization for dealing with cases when they arise. I am reminded that there are a number of cases where the member who appears before the Disciplinary Committee has been found not guilty, or the case not proven, or the offence is considered not sufficiently serious to warrant any action being taken.

I think the question of the Members' Handbook has really been dealt with adequately from the body of the hall.

I trust I have dealt with everything that has been raised and I would now like to put the resolution, which has been proposed and seconded, to the meeting. Will those in favour please raise their hands. Those against? I do not think we need count the number in favour – the resolution is carried by a large majority.

The next resolution concerns the confirmation of the appointment of four members of the Council to fill vacancies arising since the last annual meeting. The members' names appear in paragraph 7 of the report and they are: Mr Robert Walker Cox, F.C.A., Nottingham; Mr John Vernon Eastwood, F.C.A., Manchester; Mr Arthur Walwyn John, O.B.E., F.C.A., London; Mr Douglas Spottiswoode Morpeth, B.COM., F.C.A., London. May I have your approval to deal with this matter in one resolution? (Agreed). May I ask the Vice-President to second the resolution?

The Vice-President: I second the resolution.

The President: Will those in favour please raise their hands? Any against? That is carried without dissent.

The next item on the agenda relates to the following eleven members of the Council who retire under bye-law 5 and are eligible for re-election. The names of the members in practice (other than the Society's appointed members whose position is governed by clause 18 of the Scheme of Integration) have been referred to the district societies concerned, and no other nominations have been received. I therefore declare the eleven members re-elected in accordance with bye-law 8. They are: Mr William Leonard Barrows, LL.D., F.C.A., Birmingham; Mr George Thomas Everard Chamberlain, F.C.A., Leicester; Mr Arthur Walwyn John, O.B.E., F.C.A., London; Mr Hugh Oliver Johnson, F.C.A., Bath; Mr Reginald Oscar Arnold Keel, F.C.A., Kingswood, Surrey; Sir William Halford Lawson, C.B.E., B.A., F.C.A., London; Mr Redvers Boulton Leech, M.B.E., T.D., F.C.A., Coventry; Mr Robert McNeil, F.C.A., Hove; Mr Sidney John Pears, F.C.A., London; Mr Frank Edward Price, F.C.A., Newport, Mon; Mr David Steele, F.C.A., Bradford.

The next resolution concerns the appointment of auditors (paragraph 139 of the report). Mr James Mansfield Keith, F.C.A., has been duly nominated by two members of the Institute in accordance with the provisions of bye-law 119 as auditor in the place of Mr Leonard Pells, M.A., F.C.A., who has intimated in writing his desire not to be nominated for reappointment. Mr Bernard William Rivett,

F.C.A., retires under bye-law 118 and is eligible for re-appointment. Have I your approval to deal with this matter in one resolution? (Agreed). May I have a proposal, please?

Mr O. P. Simpson, F.C.A. (Manchester): Yes, Mr President, I would like to propose:

'That Mr J. M. Keith, F.C.A., be appointed an auditor and that Mr B. W. Rivett, F.C.A., be reappointed an auditor.'

The President: Thank you, Mr Simpson. Have we a seconder?

Mr I. McNish, F.C.A. (Lincoln): Mr President, I second the resolution.

The President: Thank you. Those in favour? Those against? That is carried nem. con.

Well, ladies and gentlemen, that concludes the business of the annual meeting.

SPECIAL MEETING

A special meeting of members of the Institute was held immediately after the annual meeting on May 12th. The President again presided.

The President: This special meeting is for the purpose of considering and, if thought fit, passing the resolution set out on the reverse of the notice convening the meeting.

The effect of the resolution would be to enable the Institute to participate, together with The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants in the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services on the understanding that The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland will become one of the participating bodies as soon as it has obtained the approvals and constitutional amendments it requires. An explanatory note concerning the resolution is included on the reverse of the notice convening the meeting. I now formally propose the resolution.

The Resolution

The Vice-President: I second the resolution.

The President: Has anyone any comments they wish to make on the resolution? Well, the resolution has been proposed and seconded. Will those in favour of the resolution please raise their hands? Those against? There are none against.

Vote of Thanks to President

Mr C. Wheatley, F.C.A. (Birmingham): Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, it is my privilege this year, as President of the Birmingham District Society, to propose a vote of thanks to our President for presiding at this annual meeting and to express our appreciation to him for all the work he has done on our behalf and for the work he has done during his ten years as a member of the Council. When I first came into this room this morning, I looked at the motto behind our President and I thought it could have been written for him, particularly the line beginning 'The spirit of wisdom and understanding'. I am sure our President has both wisdom and understanding.

A year as President is a very arduous one and I am sure we are all very grateful to him for visiting all the district societies and attending all our annual dinners. We in Birmingham were particularly pleased for him to visit us and open our new library and offices. It is the highest honour which members can bestow upon any member to invite him to become President and I am sure you will all agree with me that our President has filled his office with great distinction and maintained the very high standard set by his predecessors. He has travelled many hundreds of miles during his year of office on our behalf not only in this country but also abroad. Those of us who have been privileged to meet him on his visits have been very struck by his natural charm and understanding. I am sure this is a very great asset to any President when he has to meet many people in all walks of life and maintain the image of the Institute.

I am sure, ladies and gentlemen, he will remember this year as one of the great years in his life and it will no doubt give him great satisfaction in future years to know that during his year of office the Institute has again made great steps forward in the approach to education and training for the profession. Ladies and gentlemen, I have very much pleasure in asking you to join with me in expressing our appreciation and thanks to Mr Densem, our President.

The motion was carried by acclamation.

The President: Thank you very much, Mr Wheatley, for the very kind things you have said, very few of which are really deserved, and thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for the very kindly way you received Mr Wheatley's words.

THE CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

Seventy-ninth Annual Meeting

The annual general meeting of The Chartered Accountants' Benevolent Association was held following the annual and special meetings of the Institute last Wednesday, Sir William S. Carrington, F.C.A., President of the Association, was in the chair.

The President said: Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, will you agree to take the notice convening the meeting as read? (Agreed.)

Before moving the adoption of the Report and Accounts for the year ended February 28th, 1965, I would like to express thanks to all who have assisted the Association during the year. This includes subscribers, members of the Executive Committees, members of the Institute in various parts of the country who have acted as referees in regard to applications for assistance, and last, but by no means least, the Institute Secretariat who have responded to every call and have busied themselves very considerably in the interests of the Benevolent Association.

The special matter of the reimbursement to the Institute of the expenditure incurred by it and attributed to the Association is dealt with in the memorandum issued by the Secretary of the Institute and in paragraph 5 of the report of the Board of Governors of the Benevolent Association. I do hope and trust that as many members of the Institute as possible will complete the card and return it to the Secretary so that the Council may have a clear view as to the extent to which members consider that the Institute should bear the costs of administration of the Benevolent Association.

Reference was made earlier this morning to the costs of administration and the allegation was put forward that they are exorbitant and extravagant. I refute that completely. The way to look at costs is not to equate them solely to subscription income. If you wish to compare one charity with another, you should take the subscription income, the investment income and the relief together, and then see what the ratio of expense is to the aggregation of those items, and in our case, ladies and gentlemen, the cost of the Institute Benevolent – I have had these figures worked out and I have also had them worked out in relation to a number of other charities carrying on a similar function – our percentage is 13·9 per cent. I will not quote others but I will tell you this, ours compare extremely favourably with them and I for one feel that I have nothing to be ashamed of in our figures.

It will be observed that our investment income has increased from £14,800 to something over £22,000. This arises from the investment of the large capital sum we received in the previous year from the Merrett Estate. Before I leave this question of cost, I might remind you that we have a portfolio of over half a million pounds of investments; they have got to be looked after and serviced and we also have to deal with a number of matters which do not find their reflex in the accounts but which are referred to in the report – the help we give to people with their social problems, the help we give them in getting National Assistance where they can appropriately do so and it is to their financial advantage to do so. All these things have got to be looked after – the help we give to organizations such as the Crossways Trust, and there is a reference in the Annual Report to a new departure, namely, where we are trying to place, with a view to rehabilitation, those who have fallen by the wayside and who need some help beyond mere financial help. Not very often, but we do get cases of men who have transgressed the rules of the Institute – they may have gone to prison; they come out, they have got a wife and children, and the best thing you can do for that man is to try and put him on his feet again and to help him become once more a useful member of Society. We do not plead their case before the Institute for readmission, but we do endeavour to find them employment from whence they can rebuild their character and from whence they can obtain the requisites for keeping their wives and families together. We are now getting help in that from the Accountants' Christian Fellowship, whose help we greatly appreciate and we are most pleased to have them associated with us. Theirs is a noble work and it is one for which we all ought to be grateful.

With those few remarks, Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, I now move that the Report and Accounts for the year ended February 28th, 1965, be received and adopted, and I will ask the President of the Institute to second.

Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A.: I have great pleasure in seconding that motion.

The President: The meeting is now open for questions.

A Member: Mr President, I would like to ask whether we might be able to cut down on our expenditure by way of the Institute if instead of circulating the annual report of the Benevolent to all 34,508 members in the United Kingdom, we restricted it to the members of the Benevolent Association. I base this point on the following reason – the Institute's annual report does make mention of the Benevolent and it could, maybe, make a little bit more mention in the future and possibly by eliminating this report from the Institute annual report, perhaps it would cut down on the postage of the Institute report to members and also cut down the amount we are asked to pay to the Institute in respect of the Benevolent Association.

The President: We will certainly look into that. Paradoxically enough, it might cost more than the way we proceed now, because of the sorting involved as between the 40,000 members of the Institute as a whole and the five or six thousand members of the Benevolent; if the Benevolent had to address separate envelopes and pay postage on them, I think our cost would go up. Secondly, I feel that there is some virtue to be obtained by following the Holy Writ and not hiding our light under a bushel – that we help the Benevolent by bringing its activities to the notice of all members of the Institute and letting them know we want their support by subscriptions. But we will certainly consider it at the next meeting.

A member: Mr President I am sure we must all support the appeal made here this morning for increased subscriptions for the Benevolent, but at the same time I have heard the view expressed that the Benevolent Association has got a lot of money and that it does not distribute anything like the amount of its income after expenses. I also understand that a difficulty arises in a society such as this, in that if the Association increases the relief, the National Assistance is reduced. It therefore makes no sense at all so far as the beneficiary is concerned if the Association increases its relief. I just wonder what is the answer to this so far as the Association is concerned, because until the amount of relief that can be given to any beneficiary exceeds what he or she would get from National Assistance, the Association is surely prevented by this reduction of National Assistance payment from making any further benevolence on those cases.

The President: You are quite correct. The National Assistance situation does give rise to extreme difficulty and it is something that is always with us on the Committee, as to whether we would be justified in saying: 'Do not go to the National Assistance, let the Benevolent Fund pay out' but it would cost us many thousands of pounds if we did that. Therefore in appropriate cases – and I stress the word 'appropriate' – we do encourage people to apply for National Assistance and we give them help in so doing.

As to the other point, I think one should bear this in mind – that broadly speaking the present generation of beneficiaries have come forward, so to speak, from a day and time when the membership of the Institute was something of the order of ten or fifteen thousand. The big influx to the Institute membership as of today is of a young age, or a relatively young age, but as the years roll by the average age will come up, and when you have a generation seeking assistance out of 40,000 members, I think the cost must be much greater than it is of today from that smaller number of Institute members. That being so, I think the numbers will increase and the outgoings in relief will be greater, and therefore I do suggest that it is the duty of the present generation to provide for those of our members who will eventually fall by the wayside. Therefore I make no excuse for asking for more subscriptions.

A member: Mr President, I hope, contrary to an earlier speaker, that the report will continue to go out to the 40,000 members. What I would ask is that consideration be given to the future presentation of the report to make it rather less formal and rather a better factual begging document. Where I come from it was very wet last Saturday and I happened to read the Report, somewhat pointedly because I had just been visiting a 90-year-old widow of a chartered accountant and her 79-year-old sister, neither of whom, fortunately, need your Association. That caused me to look through the excellent case reports, and I read them, I suppose, thinking they were mainly old people, but they are nothing of the kind. There are sixty-four cases out of 154 who are under 60 years of age, and against those sixty-four cases, according to my figuring, there are 120 children. I feel that you would perhaps stand a better chance of getting more people to subscribe if this formal report brought out the fact that many of us here now have contemporaries who may be in need of this Association and that is it not confined entirely to old people.

The President: Thank you for your suggestion. This is certainly the age of public relations and presentation of documents and reports and accounts in a manner which appeals to the eye, and what you have said will be considered long before the time comes to make up next year's annual report.

A member: May I refer to the suggestion that the expenses of the Association should be reimbursed to the Institute. When one looks at the figures, we have 40,000 members and they subscribe between them £14,000. It does not seem to me very much to ask that they should collectively subscribe another £3,000. I would urge everyone to return the card we have had on the basis that the whole cost should be borne by the Institute.

A member: Mr President, may I say how pleased I am to see so many people at this meeting. It is usually very depressing to see the number of empty seats when we hold the Benevolent meeting. I think what we have got to look at is the 5,285 members and not the £14,000. Most of our income comes from people who leave legacies to the Association. When one sees the amount of money that is left by chartered accountants, one naturally hopes – but I am afraid it is not so – that some of this might be left to us, but they do not seem to think of legacies. In just the same way I was guilty for some years of forgetting to renew by subscription. I have been a member for forty-two years and I did forget it and I apologize, but I went back and made up for all those years. It is obvious that the income has got to go up. How it is going to be done I am sure I do not know. We have 40,000 members. Let us assume that 30,000 are able to subscribe, and when we see that only 5,000 do subscribe I think it is disgraceful.

A member: Mr President, on the point the last speaker raised of trying to get an increase in the number of subscribers to the Association, may I put forward this suggestion – I feel very strongly about this. If all the District Societies were circularized and each member of the committee of each District Society took it upon himself to approach say, ten or twenty members of the District Society who are not already subscribers to the Association, I feel that would be an opportunity of getting quite a number of our members as new subscribers to the Association and might augment our income very appreciably.

The President: I think we have had a very helpful discussion. May I put the motion to the meeting that the Report and Accounts of the Benevolent Association for the year ended February 28th, 1965, be received and adopted? Those in favour? Those to the contrary? Carried unanimously.

Can I have a proposal with regard to the auditors?

Mr R. F. Emmerson: It gives me great pleasure to move this resolution:

'That Mr Bernard William Rivett, F.C.A., and Mr James Mansfield Keith, F.C.A., be appointed auditors for the year 1965–66 at a fee of 300 guineas'.

The President: May I have a seconder?

Mr N. B. Nutt: I second the resolution.

The President: I put that to the meeting. Those in favour? Those against? In announcing that that was carried unanimously, may I take the opportunity of thanking the auditors, for their work on our behalf. A fee is now being paid them – I do not like to call it a 'fee' because it is more or less reimbursement of direct costs, so they are making a substantial contribution in terms of their own personal time and they are making no profit whatever from us, so we must be grateful to them for their services. That concludes the meeting.

Mr B. V. Piggott: Ladies and gentlemen, before we end this meeting I would just like to say a few words of thanks to Sir William Carrington for honouring us once again by holding office as President of the Benevolent Association during the past year. It is an important and responsible post. It carries the responsibility for obtaining money, which, as you have heard, is very difficult, and it carries responsibility for making good use of that money. One thing I am quite sure of and that is that Sir William's heart is in this work, and I would like you all to join with me in a vote of thanks for his work during the past year.

The motion was carried by acclamation.

The President: Thank you very much. It is a pleasure to be associated with the Benevolent Association and I hope that those here when they go out of this room will reiterate the suggestions that we should have more members. Thank you very much.

The proceedings then terminated.

Twenty-third Annual General Meeting

THE twenty-third annual general meeting of The London and District Society of Chartered Accountants was held at the Little Ship Club, Upper Thames Street, London, on May 13th. Mr Alan P. Hughes, F.C.A., Chairman of the Society, presided.

Mr Alan P. Hughes

The annual report of the Committee was reproduced in The Accountant of May 8th.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS

In the course of his address, proposing the adoption of the accounts for the year to December 31st, 1964, and the annual report of the Committee to March 31st, 1965, the Chairman asked for consent that, having been circulated with the notice convening the meeting, these documents, with the auditors' report, be taken as read. This was agreed.

Pointing out that the Committee had instructed that the Chairman should refrain from reminiscing about the past, but should turn his attention to present and future events, he went on to comment on the work that was being done by the Committee in connection with the report on the Students' Society that had been asked for by the Council and also their work in connection with the introductory courses for newly-articled clerks that were now taking very firm shape. A Joint Planning Committee had recently been set up consisting of representatives of the Council, the District Society, the Students' Society, education authorities, coaching institutions and technical colleges. He paid tribute to the unstinted help that had been given by Mr C. V. Best as chairman of the appropriate subcommittees, on whose shoulders so much work had fallen. Allied with this he pointed out the increase in the number of examination candidates and asked that any members able to spare time to act as invigilators should give their names to the society's Secretary.

Formation of New Groups

The Chairman then referred to the progress that was being made with regard to the formation of groups, indicating the steady, if unspectacular, increase in the numbers. One healthy sign was that one or two of them had grown so big that they had had to divide into additional groups. He stressed the fact that the power of the Institute depended very largely on knowing the views of the individual members and these were best made known by discussion in groups passing through the channel of district societies. He referred to the new groups that had been formed, with special appreciation of the work of the Vice-Chairman, Mr Gordon Smith, who had made it his special responsibility to pursue this side of the Society's work. He added that it was in connection with this work that the Vice-Chairman was hoping for a full response in the return of the cards that had been sent to all members with the notice of the meeting and he touched on the friendly negotiations that were taking place with their sister-society in the south-eastern region as to a possible realignment of their mutual boundary.

The Chairman went on to say that the Committee, having paid due note to all friendly criticisms received relating to meetings already held, was most anxious to hear from members as to subjects that they would like to see forming the basis of future meetings for the 1965–66 programme.

Mr Hughes then spoke of the work done by the Advice to Members' Subcommittee and urged that members should submit any problems that they might have to that subcommittee.

He went on to refer to the valuable series of booklets now in process of issue by the Institute and said it was clear that these were going to form a valuable and constructive addition to the publications already available and would undoubtedly form the basis for many future discussions.

Finance Bill 'Jungle'

'One further matter that will exercise our minds and our energies for some little time to come, and one that has already received a great deal of attention of members of your Committee is a small paperback of some 226 pages recently published, and entitled the Finance (No. 2) Bill, 1965.

'I cannot recall a more labyrinthine jungle of intertwined words and clauses, a more elaborately ingenious structure of incredible formulae. I would say that never has so much been proposed to be enacted to achieve so relatively little.

'All this, I am afraid, we shall have to accept as inseparable from the imposition of new taxation and of a new system of company taxation. Privately we may find the provisions distasteful: we may object to the curious, possibly unnecessary way in which the Bill has dealt with a number of matters. It has been said that 1965–66 will be the year of the wide boys and the spivs, and this we would all deplore. Be that as it may. As chartered accountants and as members of the Institute to which we are proud to belong, I think we have to ignore our private thoughts and concentrate on ensuring that our understanding of the Bill will be adequate to enable us to continue to render that impartial service to our clients for which our members have justly built up an impeccable reputation.

'On these matters, just as in matters of company law, where again we may be faced with new legislation following the Jenkins Report, we shall strive, as always, to produce, and assist our clients in producing, a true and fair view whether it be on accounts or on taxation.

'Ladies and gentlemen, I am now fast approaching what is, for a Chairman of a district society, his disembarkation point. It is nearly a year now since, very humbly, I was escorted to the bridge of the ship of the London and District Society. It has been a most enjoyable and invigorating year, and the London District has had a great deal to do, but I would think that few chairmen can have received such help and support as I have.

'I have already referred to Mr Gordon Smith on whose stalwart shoulders I have rested so heavily. I know that my predecessor in office was nothing like so fortunate in his Vice-Chairman!

'In addition, I have had unstinted help from all my friends and colleagues on the Committee itself, and I am most grateful to them.

'I have referred to the Vice-Chairman and to my colleagues on the Committee. However hard we all work, our efforts might well come to naught if we had not behind us a very fine secretariat led by our Secretary, Mr J. W. G. Cocke and our Assistant Secretary, Mr R. F. Crichton. They achieve a blend of disarming diplomacy and beguiling charm, which nevertheless masks a tyrannical despotism!

'I hope they will forgive this light-hearted reference to them: because they know full well how heavily I have relied on them during the year. Every tiny query, every point of difficulty, nothing has been too much for them to deal with swiftly and courteously and efficiently. You will have appreciated from the report what a vast amount of work they have administered so excellently, and my thanks, and all our thanks, are due to them.'

COULD YOUR TYPIST COMPLETE HER INVOICING BY 2.30 P.M.?

. . . thus leaving her more time for the many other jobs around the office. She might if she used Primus Continuous Stationery. This remarkable system can increase output by as much as 50 per cent. Briefly, it works by combining several sets of forms, works orders, invoices, statements, delivery notes, etc., into one set that can be completed in one typing. Primus Systems are CONTINUOUS (the sets of forms are attached end-to-end and perforated) and the carbon papers are positioned automatically. The time usually taken to interleave sets of forms with carbons and insert them into the typewriter is saved. This enables your typist to complete one and a half sets of forms for every one she does now. A 50 per cent increase in output!

IN PARLIAMENT

Finance Bill: Schedule 17

Mr GEORGE Y. MACKIE asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies he expects to be close companies within the meaning of Schedule 17 to the Finance Bill; and how much additional revenue in the year 1965–66 and 1966–67 he expects to raise as a result of assessment under clause 72 (1) of the Bill.

Mr DIAMOND: It is not expected that there will be any marked difference in the number of companies falling within Schedule 17 of the Finance Bill, as compared with the number within section 245 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. The amount of revenue raised under clause 72 (1) will depend on the amount of companies' profits and the dividend policies they follow.

£ Sterling: Purchasing Power

Mr GALBRAITH asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage the value of the pound sterling has declined since 1945.

Mr DIAMOND: On the basis of movements in the consumer price index, the internal purchasing power of the pound sterling is estimated to have fallen by 48 per cent between 1946 and March 1965, the latest available date. A comparable figure based on 1945 is not available.

THE ROYAL MINT IN 1964

Last year a total of 1,044,628,268 coins were struck by the Royal Mint, the highest total ever attained, and exceeding by over two hundred million the previous record output of 836 million in 1961. United Kingdom coinage totalled 441,152,068 pieces and for overseas Governments a new record figure of 603,476,200 coins, or 60 per cent of the year's output. The number of pieces produced for the United Kingdom consisted of 4,576,800 half-crowns, 16,313,000 florins, 18,864,000 shillings, 137,352,000 sixpences, 47,440,000 threepences, 144,462,000 pennies, 72,134,400 halfpennies and 4,778 Maundy coins. The number of pennies produced was a new record total. Issues of new cupro-nickel coin totalled £10·06 million, of which £8·24 million represented an expansion of the amount of coin in circulation.

Coinages struck for thirty-one Commonwealth and foreign countries comprised 108 different denominations. New coinages were prepared for Ghana, Malawi, Sierra Leone, South Arabia and Zambia, and other countries supplied with coins included Burma, Ceylon, Ethiopia, Greece, Iraq, Jordan, Muscat, Nicaragua, the Philippines and Viet Nam.

PUBLIC LIBRARY STATISTICS

In the year ended March 31st, 1964, library authorities in England and Wales spent £25,858,887 on providing library services according to a return on Public Library Statistics 1963–64 published by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and the Society of County Treasurers.

The cost of employees represented £12,370,152 (48 per cent) of the total expenditure; books and newspapers, £6,409,015 (25 per cent); and premises, £2,610,272 (10 per cent). A total of £966,542 was recovered in fines and fees and £454,569 in other income, leaving a rate-borne expenditure of £24,437,776 compared with £22,251,092 in 1963–64, a rise of nearly 10 per cent. The expenditure for 1963–64 was equivalent to 10*s* 6*d* a year per head of population or just over 7*d* per week for the average family. Expenditure per head in the metropolitan boroughs was much higher than in other types of authority, but this was due largely to the fact that a service is provided for a daytime population which considerably exceeds the resident population.

Copies of the return are available from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, Westminster, London SW1, price 10*s* 6*d* post free.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS OVERSEAS

Four further booklets in the 1964–65 series dealing with economic conditions in member and associated countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development have recently been issued, covering Denmark, Switzerland, Italy and Ireland. Copies of the booklets are available from H.M. Stationery Office, price 5*s* each.

60 minutes fast...

LV

You, the employer, want maximum efficiency seven hours a day from your staff, whether they number 1, or 1,000. So you offer pension and insurance schemes, incentive bonuses, etc. But there's an eighth hour in a working day — 60 minutes of lunch time, which could mean either eating or fasting to your employees. In the interests of recruiting and retaining the right staff, an added incentive has taken its important place beside the normal welfare schemes modern workers expect. LUNCHEON VOUCHERS — the difference between eating and fasting... between expense and investment.

Undoubtedly, your secretary would appreciate Luncheon Vouchers. In which case, she'll willingly send for this new brochure, 'Luncheon Vouchers and People.' People like her.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT

by C. S. DEVERELL, M.A., B.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

National Productivity Year was a singularly appropriate time for the appearance of this book, the more so as recent events have underlined the need to extend the most effective methods of management to the whole of our industry and commerce. Professional associations have recognized the urgency of this matter. Nor is the recognition limited to such bodies as the British Institute of Management and the Institution of Works Managers. The importance of business administration has been stressed in the revised examination scheme of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, and the Corporation of Secretaries. At the same time, many colleges of technology and commerce have introduced courses leading to Diplomas in Business Studies which require a knowledge of modern management techniques. University students engaged on B.Sc. Economics or similar courses are expected to acquire a sound basic understanding of the field. They, and all the students pursuing the courses mentioned here, should find the book invaluable.

National Planning

IN the House of Commons last November Mr GEORGE BROWN announced the Government's intention of producing, in consultation with both sides of industry, a plan for the next five years to guide the development of the economy. The planning process, he said, must be and will be co-operative. Industry was to be involved at all stages, and the Department of Economic Affairs would 'draw together both regional and national economic planning so that each can be related to the other and contribute to the other'.

Since then a Department of Economic Affairs questionnaire has been sent to the nationalized undertakings and industrial economic development committees, requiring them to give estimates of output, sales, investment, materials, labour requirements, together with possible increases in efficiency and other developments for the period up to 1970. It is common knowledge that the short period, i.e. two months, which they have been given to complete this complex statistical exercise has been criticized as inadequate. Given this information, the D.E.A. hopes within a further two to three months to integrate and correlate the estimates so as to achieve 'an agreed plan in which Government and industry can work together'.

In an Eaton Paper entitled The National Plan, issued this week by The Institute of Economic Affairs, Mr JOHN BRUNNER poses some pertinent questions on the relevance and adequacy of this exercise. A fundamental consideration, he notes, is the assumption which firms are asked to bear in mind that the gross domestic product will increase by 25 per cent by 1970, just as exports are expected to increase more rapidly than in the past. The difficulties of forecasts and projections of output and demand for goods and services are well known and have been illustrated, not least, by Government committees in the post-war period. Mr BRUNNER recalls the outcome of the inquiry into scientific and technological manpower supplies, as well as the official estimates relating to the future supply of factors as diverse as doctors and coal.

Nevertheless, the Department of Economic Affairs is not inhibited from asking for detailed estimates for the period 1965–70 of investment analysed by buildings, plant and vehicles, to say nothing of ships and aircraft. Regional estimates of both employment and investment are required; and the answers to the question as to the 'scope for achieving increases in efficiency by using manpower in the most economical way' should be especially interesting.

The really interesting question, however, is not so much how the plan is to be formulated, but rather how it is to be implemente d

CAPITAL GAINS TAXATION

The New Short-term Tax

WHEN the CHANCELLOR promised the new long-term capital gains tax, he was somewhat vague as to whether the existing tax under Case VII of Schedule D would continue to exist, or whether it would be merged into the new long-term tax. Under the Finance Bill as published, the most complicated route of all has been taken. The existing Case VII tax is unchanged in so far as any asset was acquired or disposed of before April 7th, 1965, and in so far as a 'section 14' company acquired land before that date.

For later acquisitions and disposals there is in effect a new short-term gains tax and the White Paper published with the Bill speaks of it in that way. Taking also the new long-term capital gains tax, we thus have three concurrent taxes on capital gains; perhaps a case of too many taxes chasing too few gains. Now to make the position still more complicated, the new short-term gains tax, like the old one, is assessed under the same Case VII of Schedule D and, broadly speaking, it takes over practically all the Case VII rules.

The changes made in order to convert the old Case VII in relation to acquisitions or disposals after April 6th, 1965, are contained in clauses 16 and 17 of the Finance Bill, which are to be construed as one with Chapter II of Part II of the Finance Act, 1962.

It is to be emphasized that these changes apply only where neither acquisition nor disposal took place before April 7th, 1965. Clause 16 (1) ends the distinction between land and other property in relation to period of ownership and provides a single period of twelve months between acquisition and disposal as the test of liability to short-term gains tax.

Under the 1962 legislation 'tangible moveable property' was excluded from charge, with certain exceptions which brought in commodities governed by a futures market, currency, and also any tangible moveable property bought for the purposes of a business but disposed of without being used. Clause 16 (2) of the Finance Bill cancels the general exception of tangible moveable property, and consequently the specific inclusions. However, certain types of tangible moveable property are still outside the scope of Case VII. Few people who are not car dealers can make anything but a loss on disposal of their private cars, and therefore clause 16 (3) forestalls a flood of loss claims by in effect excluding private cars. However, the word 'car' does not figure in the definition. A mechanically propelled road vehicle constructed or adapted for the carriage of passengers is within the charge only if it is a type not commonly used as a private vehicle and is unsuitable to be so used. Whether this wording excludes mini-vans or not is a question which is already sub judice.

In the 1962 legislation the draftsman seemed satisfied that currency was tangible moveable property. In clause 16 (4) of the Bill he seems not so sure, for he specifically brings it within the charge. However, he continues the exception in favour of currency which an individual acquires for personal expenditure abroad by himself, his family or his dependants. Included in personal expenditure is the maintenance of a residence abroad.

It is implicit in the above changes that if a person gives away tangible moveable property he can be charged to income tax and surtax on the excess of the market value, at the time of the gift, over the cost. However, where that market value does not exceed £100 the gain is exempt (clause 16 (5)). There is a similar exemption in clause 26 (2) from tax on long-term capital gains. Clause 16 (5) 'taken together with' clause 26 (2) is not to apply to gifts made by the same individual in the same year of assessment if the total market value exceeds £100. For the purpose of this limit on the exemption, each gift is to be valued at the date it was made. Since it is the aggregate which has to be valued, the unfortunate donor will have the burden each year of adding up the value of all the gifts he has made, no matter how trivial. On the other hand, there should be some scope for claiming losses.

In the new long-term gains tax there is provision in clause 31 of the Finance Bill for, as it were, putting into cold storage the gain accruing to a trader on trading assets which he replaces by new trading assets. These rules are extended to the short-term gains tax, with an overriding provision that there shall in any case be no charge where the period of time between the acquisition of the old asset and the disposal of the new asset does not exceed twelve months (clause 16 (6)). The last-mentioned sub-clause contains a proviso excluding it from any case where the old asset was disposed of before April 7th, 1965.

Clause 16 (7), likewise clause 16 (8) (c) (d), merely correct drafting errors in the existing Case VII legislation, but they do not affect any case where the acquisition or the disposal occurred before April 7th, 1965. In the 1962 Act, paragraph 6 (1) to Schedule 9 rather lightheartedly directed, in effect, that man and wife were to be treated as one person for Case VII purposes. The draftsman overlooked the fact that one of them might be carrying on a trade, and trading stock might pass between them – not an uncommon state of affairs. Clause 16 (8) (a) of the new Bill now deals with this by directing that paragraph 6 (1) is not to apply if

(i) until the disposal the asset formed part of the trading stock of the disponer; or

(ii) the disponee acquires the asset as trading stock.

Nice points will arise where both spouses are in partnership in unequal shares.

Clause 16 (8) (e) corrects a flaw in the drafting of paragraph 10 (4) of Schedule 9 to the Finance Act, 1962. This sub-paragraph directed that where on a reorganization a shareholder received a capital distribution from the company, he was to be treated as having disposed of an interest in his shareholding equal in market value to the distribution. This did not deal with the common case where, on a reorganization some person other than the company gives consideration to the shareholders.

As explained above, clause 16 brings within Case VII a vast range of assets falling within the description 'tangible moveable property', and excludes certain assets by reference to their intrinsic nature, e.g. private motor-cars. Clause 17 is no doubt designed to avoid the choking up of income tax administration by the consideration of vast numbers of small transactions in such things as furniture, television sets, motor cycles, and the like. Clause 17 (1) has two provisions. The first is to exempt from Case VII any gain in the case of tangible moveable property where the amount or value of the consideration for the disposal does not exceed £1,000. This provision will automatically apply to gifts also where the market value does not exceed £1,000.

The second part of clause 17 (1) applies where the consideration exceeds £1,000. It imposes a maximum on the amount of income tax and surtax which may be imposed on the gain from such disposal. This maximum is 50 per cent of the excess of the consideration over £1,000, on the footing that the gain represents the highest part of a surtax payer's income. No attempt is made to deal with the complications which arise where other provisions direct that some other income is to be deemed to be the highest part of the surtax payer's income.

What of losses arising on the disposals mentioned above? Clause 17 (2) directs that if the consideration is less than £1,000, it is to be deemed to amount to £1,000, with a consequent restriction of the loss for relief purposes. It follows that there is no restriction of loss relief where the consideration is £1,000 or more. The above provisions have no application to a disposal of

(a) commodities of any description by a person dealing on a terminal market, or with or through a person ordinarily engaged in such dealing; or

(b) currency.

Clause 17 (3) is aimed against avoidance devices under which different items in a 'set of articles' are disposed of by the same person either to one person or to persons who are acting in concert or who are 'connected with' each other in any of the ways set out in paragraph 21 of Schedule 7 to the Bill. The items are to be treated as a single asset. If the disposal is not of tangible moveable property as such, but an interest therein, then the market value of the interest retained is to be added to the consideration for the purpose of applying the £1,000 test. Clause 17 (6) withholds (apparently quite unnecessarily) the application of clause 17 from cases where acquisition or disposal took place before April 7th, 1965.

CORPORATION TAX

Computation of Profits—III

AS part of the rules for the computation of 'income' in the process of computing a company's profits for corporation tax purposes, clause 50 (5) of the Finance Bill provides that where the company's income includes the annual value of woodlands, i.e. Schedule B income, then the annual value is to be apportioned to the accounting period.

Normally, when a company resident in the United Kingdom carries on a trade, at least part of that trade is carried on in the United Kingdom and therefore falls to be assessed under Case I, and not Case V, of Schedule D. However it is theoretically possible for the trade to be carried on wholly abroad in which event the income would fall to be assessed under Case V. Clause 50 (6) directs that for corporation tax purposes the income from such a trade is nevertheless to be computed under Case I. Clause 50 (7) provides for the deduction, in computing Case IV or Case V income, of overseas tax imposed where the income arises 'where such a deduction cannot be made under, and is not forbidden by, any provision of the Income Tax Acts applied to this Act'.

What of income which has already borne income tax by deduction at source? Since such income is brought in on a current-year basis it follows that such of it as arises in the income tax year 1965–66 will still be charged to income tax (and where appropriate, profits tax) and not to corporation tax. Where it arises to a company after April 5th, 1966, it will fall into the computation of income for corporation tax purposes. It follows, by reason of clause 42 (2) and clause 75 (2) of the Bill, that it will not also be chargeable to income tax. In the ordinary way, the income tax deducted will be repayable.

However, there are special rules for 'dividends and other distributions of a company resident in the United Kingdom'. Clause 43 (1) directs that corporation tax shall not be chargeable on them nor shall they be taken into account in computing income for corporation tax. Clause 44 (1) provides that a company resident in the United Kingdom which receives 'distributions' from another such company in 1966–67 or a later year (called the recipient's 'franked investment income'), is not to be entitled to repayment of income tax deducted, even where the distributions received exceed the distributions paid. This surplus is carried forward and set off against subsequent distributions by the company.

'Chargeable gains' form another ingredient in the computation of a company's chargeable profits for the purpose of corporation tax. Clause 51 (1) provides that the amount to be included in respect of chargeable gains in a company's total profits for any accounting period shall be the total amount of chargeable gains accruing to the company in the accounting period, after deducting any allowable losses accruing to the company in the period. Allowable losses accruing earlier, in so far as not allowed as a deduction from chargeable gains accruing in any previous accounting period, are also deductible from current chargeable gains. However, nothing in clause 51 (1) applies to gains or losses accruing 'before the year 1965–66'. 'Allowable loss' does not include, for corporation tax, a loss accruing to the company in such circumstances that if it were a gain it would be exempt (clause 51 (7)). The total amount of chargeable gains to be included for corporation tax purposes is to be computed on the same principles as for capital gains tax, on the footing that the accounting period is a year of assessment (clause 51 (2)), but with the necessary changes in points of detail (see clause 51 (3)). As regards the special rules in favour of replacements of trade assets, these are to apply with necessary modifications to a public authority (clause 51 (4)).

Disposals and acquisitions inside the ring fence of a group of companies are hardly fit subjects for the imposition of tax on the 'gains'. Schedule 12, Part I applies special provisions under which, generally speaking, a disposal by one company and an acquisition by another in the same group is to be treated as though the consideration was such that neither a gain nor a loss accrued to the company disposing (paragraph 2 (1)). This rule does not apply where a group member satisfies a debt owing by it to another member, nor where it redeems redeemable preference shares (paragraph 2 (2)). The reference in paragraph 2 (1) to a disposal does not include anything which under Schedule 7 is to be treated as a disposal of an interest in shares in consideration for a capital distribution. If part of the consideration for an intra-group disposal is provided by an outsider by way of compensation for damage (e.g. by an insurance company), then the disposal is to be treated as being to that outsider (paragraph 2 (3)). In an intra-group transaction, the asset may be trading stock as regards one group member, but not as regards the other. Paragraph 3 provides for a notional appropriation to or from trading stock so as to bring in paragraph 1 of Schedule 7. Paragraph 4 of Schedule 12 makes special provision for capital allowances on a group asset disposed of outside the group. As regards the time when an asset, disposed of outside the group, is deemed to have been acquired, the members of the group are treated as one person (paragraph 5). For the purpose of the special relief where trading assets are replaced, all the trades carried on by members of the group are to be treated as a single trade (paragraph 6). In deciding what is a group and who are members of it, the test is broadly speaking the same as it was for profits tax, under section 42 of the Finance Act, 1938, i.e. the owning (directly or indirectly) of a three-quarter interest in the equity of another company makes that company the owner's subsidiary (paragraph 1).

The provisions for adapting the existing rules about capital allowances to the new corporation tax structure cover several pages and are contained in clause 59 and Schedule 13. We are concerned at this point only with the manner of granting such allowances when they have been computed. This topic is dealt with by clause 52. Sub-clause (1) of that clause provides that in computing a company's profits for any accounting period, for corporation tax purposes, the necessary deductions and additions (in the case of charges) are to be made. The words 'in computing' are of course significant; for income tax, capital allowances are given 'in charging' the income, i.e. they are given as separate allowances. Allowances and charges falling to be made in taxing a trade are to be treated as trading receipts or expenses as the case may be (clause 52 (2)). Where the rules provide for allowance by way of discharge or repayment, the allowance is to be deducted as far as may be in arriving at the income of the class against which the allowance is primarily available (clause 52 (3)). Where a balancing charge does not fall to be treated as a trading receipt, it is not to fall within Case VI of Schedule D but is to be treated as additional income of the same class as that from which the corresponding capital allowances would fall to be deducted (clause 52 (4)).

Suppose the capital allowances under income tax rules have to be given by way of discharge or repayment but under clause 52 (3) have to be deducted from income of the appropriate class, in fact exceed that income; clause 52 (5) provides for automatic carry forward for deduction from the appropriate income of subsequent accounting periods. However, clause 52 (6) allows the company to elect to set off these excess allowances against the 'profits' (i.e. income and chargeable gains) of the same accounting period. It also allows the company to take the unallowed allowances back to the aggregate profits of previous accounting periods subject to the limits imposed by clause 52 (7) and provided that the company was within the charge to corporation tax in the previous periods. It is very difficult to make any sense out of clause 52 (7) and it is at least doubtful whether the construction placed on that tortuous sub-clause by the White Paper is correct. It is provided that the previous accounting periods must all end within a length of time which is equal in length to the accounting period in which the excess arises. However, they do not specify when this length of time ends. The White Paper takes this point as being the beginning of the accounting period in which the excess arises, and no doubt this is what is intended. Broadly speaking, the excess is carried back to a period of equal length to the accounting period in which the excess arises. Confusion is further confounded by clause 52 (7) referring first to 'profits' and then to 'income'.

Clause 53 deals with the expenses of management of an investment company.

Broadly speaking the clause applies with necessary modifications, the provisions about management expenses relief set out in section 425 of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

Wage Payments by Credit Transfer

by R. CONWAY, A.M.I.E.E., A.M.I.Prod.E.
General Manager, Rediffusion Redihire (Midlands) Ltd

Considering a Change

DURING a recent drive to reduce factory costs and simplify office routine, consideration was given in the writer's organization to making wage payments to all employees (in addition to monthly paid staff) by credit transfer.

It will be recalled that the law was changed after the publication of the findings of a nine-man committee appointed under the chairmanship of Mr David Karmel in 1959 to consider amendments to the Truck Acts, 1831 to 1940. The committee's report was made available on March 27th, 1961, and was published as a White Paper.

The subsequent Payment of Wages Act not only changed the existing law of payment of wages in cash but also revised the Truck Acts to be more suitable for modern trading conditions, with particular reference to payment of wages in the employee's absence; provisions as to 'notices and statements' – the requirements applicable to payments to authorized persons; the making of agreements for payment in unusual ways between employee and employer; and provisions for cancellation of such agreements. There is also reference to the practice of industrial fines and the provision of authorization for local tribunals to arbitrate on payments disputes between employee and employer. These revisions led to a wide re-examination of the credit system.

Until the Act came into force, payment other than by cash contravened the Truck Acts and prior to the revision of the Act any approach had been merely tentative; however, the way was then clear. To assess the complexity of the task employees were asked:

(a) if they had a banking account;

(b) if so, whether it was a current or deposit account;

(c) whether they have accounts with such stores as the Co-operative Society;

(d) if they had a cheque book;

(e) whether their account, if any, was held locally;

(f) if they would be prepared to accept payment of wages by cheque or alternatively by traders' credit?

Whilst considering the savings and advantages of payment by traders' credit, it was decided that other possible savings in clerical work should be examined. Additional saving could be achieved by paying fortnightly instead of weekly; economies would occur by reducing wage calculations to alternate weeks, for although some wage calculations would still be made weekly, the preparation of the payroll and calculation of final deductions could be fortnightly.

Policy

The wage structure of the organization was hourly rates plus individual or group bonuses; wages were paid each Friday lunchtime for the week ending the previous Friday; wages were not fixed but varied with bonus earnings. These conditions are particularly interesting since they present somewhat difficult problems in converting to both fortnightly payments and the traders' credit system. With normal weekly payments, each employee is almost two weeks in arrear just before receiving wages and one week in arrear after receiving them. In the event of converting to fortnightly credit payments without some adjustments, the employee would be three weeks and three days in arrear immediately prior to credits being available and one week and three days in arrear immediately after receiving them. The extra three days' delay is caused by the time taken to issue the cheque and for each account to be credited. This was immediately rejected as being unacceptable.

A reasonable compromise appeared to be to make payment of one additional basic week's average pay at the commencement of the system. The employee would then, if one assumed the ex-gratia sum to be equivalent to a full week's wage, be two weeks and three days in arrear just before, and three days just after receiving the credit. The change to fortnightly wages and conversion to credit payments made simultaneously with the ex-gratia week's money and adoption of a two-week notice for termination of employment helped to maintain employee's 'goodwill'. (Of course, the recent Contract of Employment Act now has to be taken into account.) It was not expected that all staff would convert to the new system immediately, since it is a condition of the Payment of Wages Act that the employee must request any change in method of payment other than payment in cash. However, it was reasonable to suppose that new employees could be expected to approve the procedure when taking up employment.

Approach

Considering the traditionally cautious nature of the local community – East Lancashire – the result seemed satisfactory; about 40 per cent of the personnel were prepared to accept payment by credit transfer, providing provisions were made for opening the accounts and for offsetting bank charges.

From the discussions which took place, the conclusion reached was that the advantage both to employee and management was marginal and that there were also marginal disadvantages; for instance, during the eight-week change-over period two methods of payment would be running, creating additional work, but the advantages seemed likely to increase with time and familiarity with the system, particularly for the employee in a society where banking facilities were becoming more commonplace and more useful.

The present monetary system is only a slightly improved version of 'barter' and in a modern world tending more towards existence on credit it is not inconceivable that at some time in the not too distant future cash trading will be replaced almost wholly by credit methods. No doubt the day when a man will obtain a packet of cigarettes and quote a credit number for payment is a long way off, and it is conceded that the use of small change may remain; however, larger monetary transactions may well be by credit and, in fact, a fairly advanced and satisfactory credit system was in existence in parts of the Far East many years ago. However, a change of system must not be marred by any considerable disadvantages, nor by thoughtlessness during introduction.

Points in favour of the credit system is that it encourages the employee to open a current cheque book account, with the attendant facilities, and a psychological advantage that bonus-earning employees probably withdraw standard amounts of money and allow bonus variations to accumulate in the account and so stimulate a tendency to save.

Methods

The considered changes had the important advantage of avoiding the responsibility and attendant risks of handling large amounts of cash, including collection and transporting; for with the best will in the world, varying the time of cash movements is usually limited to small changes before and after a particular time on the same day of each week; and even though the cash can be insured, the possibility of injury from attacks on employees cannot be overlooked. A disadvantage of payment by credit can be that if clearance of credits is not done collectively by the employer's local bank, but through the bank head office and Central Clearing House, delays would occur before the cash became available. (The alternative of posting credits individually to employees' banks was considered unacceptable owing to the increased work involved.)

To illustrate this, if it is assumed that wages are paid on Friday morning in cash, it may frequently occur that although the wage records are not completed until the previous afternoon, there is still time on Friday morning to collect, make up and pay on time. If the same state of affairs applies when making credit transfers, the clearing slip (posted to the company's bankers) may not arrive at the bank's head office until Friday afternoon and the individual credits may not be available until the Monday or even Tuesday following. Accordingly, with this added time factor, the system adopted must be designed to reduce delays to a minimum.

Operation

After some consideration – in September 1963 – the local union district organizer was consulted and the company's views made known to him. The union offered to notify the company if anything arose to cause them to have objections to the scheme. The system was started off by making a free issue of one cheque book to each person involved, and it was also decided to pay annual bank charges up to 10s. It was hoped, however, that many employees would be banking with the company's own bankers, in which case no bank charges would be incurred.

Three possible alternative methods of transferring cash were examined:

(a) That the credit would be dispatched by a covering cheque to the central company bank to reach London on alternate Thursdays. It was considered premature to expect our bank to clear centrally the traders' credits for all employees, unless the delay previously mentioned was accepted between posting and receipt, or unless employees' own banks were prepared to offer credit prior to getting clearance, and with new accounts this was most unlikely.

(b) A more satisfactory alternative, at least initially, appeared to be to send to each bank concerned a list of the employees involved with their particular branch and one cheque covering payment for these people. In this case the only point at issue was whether individual banks would accept a cheque backed by our company's reputation as being as good as cash, for it must be appreciated that the banks would be advancing cash at noon on Fridays against a cheque in their possession, but not cleared until the following Tuesday.

(c) The third method was for the company to send a list with the wages of all employees for the two-week period to its own local branch bank with a cheque covering the total for all wages. This information to reach the bank's local branch on alternate Thursdays. The banks would then accept responsibility for distributing, through local town clearance, the cash for the employee's local banks; by this method the responsibility for accepting company credit would rest with our own bankers. The credits to a few banks in adjoining towns not attending local clearance meetings would be by telephone.

This last method was adopted. Subsequently, a selection of local banks was made from which employees could choose; each bank receives direct the fortnightly earnings slips (covering only their own customers' credits) showing net wages.

It was initially suggested that for all employees under 18 years of age credit should be in a parent's name; but it was considered that this would be unacceptable to our present-day youngsters, and juveniles each had accounts cleared with the local bank authorities. (With the certain spread of this type of payment, it may be necessary and desirable to introduce a special juvenile cheque system, making it easy and attractive for the average teenager to hold and use a cheque book account and encourage saving, but with restrictions to prevent abuse – possibly using cheques overprinted 'Juvenile Account'.)

Before the final date for the introduction of the scheme, a number of talks were given to the staff to explain the method of payment and to answer questions. A circular letter explaining the system was also issued.

Conclusion

Most readers will be as interested in the result as in the preparation, and it is satisfying to report that after little more than a year the method and organization are operating successfully; and from the initial 40 per cent accepting credit payments, the number now paid by this method amounts to nearly 100 per cent. Employees have commented how pleased they are with the arrangement; undoubtedly many of them are gratified at being part of a forward-thinking experiment, and have a justifiable pride in possessing a current bank account. In this age when the office girl spends her holidays in Majorca, the value of a bank account is more readily accepted.

If as an attraction to encouraging this method of payment, banks could be persuaded to operate a shorter total working week but one which included opening between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Friday evenings (and shops generally, too) – then the trend would be accelerated. As it is, the writer has no hesitation in saying that he would seriously consider putting payment by credit transfer for all personnel into any business he controlled. It is, of course, a prerequisite that considerable amount of effort must be put into the preliminary campaigning.

Perhaps a further step in speeding the trend would be the adoption of the gyro system (used in some parts of the Continent) to use Post Office facilities for credit transfer; for in turn this would force the banking houses, who now charge 6*d* for each payment made, to improve their own credit transfer permits; and, of course, with each improvement which makes payment by the individual both easier and safer, the use of primitive money will become less attractive and society in general more efficient and effective.

Internal Auditing in Depth

by G. T. SENTANCE
Manager, Group Internal Audit, Shell-Mex and B.P. Ltd.

I DO not think that there is anything particularly new in auditing in depth and most of us have, at some time or another, tackled our auditing jobs in this way. However, in my view, if thought is given to making greater use of this approach to auditing, we can do a better and more effective job of work.

In my view, 'auditing in depth' means the need to follow one particular procedure or transaction through from initiation to completion. In actual practice this does not mean, however, that one always starts at the bottom and works upwards but according to circumstances one can start at the top and work downwards if this will provide a suitable and practical approach. To make my point clearer, let me take two specific examples: first, that relating to the sale of a product; in this instance one would start at the issuing point or the order from the customer and follow the transaction right the way through until settlement has been effected. This is quite obviously the simplest method of following this particular type of transaction.

On the other hand, when dealing with accounts payable, it would probably prove easier to carry out the procedure in reverse by starting with the actual drawing of a cheque in settlement of a purchase or a service rendered and to follow this back through all the stages to the initial requisitioning for the purchase or the procurement of a service.

Advantages of Auditing in Depth

So much for the definition and the broad approach. Let us now consider what benefits are to be obtained by approaching the audit by this route.

First, by following such a procedure it is possible to test all controls at all stages and so ensure that there are no loopholes which might lead to defalcations. For example, in the case of the sale of products the auditor would check the following points:

(1) orders have been received from accredited customers of the company;

(2) stock control of issues provides suitable safeguards;

(3) control to the sales ledger meets all the requirements;

(4) the system controlling the posting of invoices to customers' accounts is working satisfactorily;

(5) credit control and follow up of overdue accounts is adequate;

(6) the inward receipt of cash or cheques and banking thereof is properly controlled.

These checks would not necessarily all be carried out at the same point or at the same time, but following the same batch of transactions through to finality is a far more satisfactory approach than an individual audit of each of these functions in isolation which might leave gaps that would otherwise have been overlooked.

Secondly, in the course of carrying out an audit in this fashion the opportunity arises to study the system as a whole and to look for methods of increased efficiency, including in particular the work-flow and movement of paper which all too often causes unnecessary delays and slows down the procedure, besides requiring greater clerical effort.

Thirdly, where computers are used, this approach becomes almost essential, for many of the previous checks become virtually impossible as they may be built into the programme. This method will ensure the programmes are working effectively and producing the desired results.

Fourthly, financial authorities are all important and these can often differ at the various stages of the procedure, for frequently a higher authority once given at the initial stage of a transaction can be delegated in the subsequent stages. Auditing in depth will ensure that the proper authority having initiated a project, any subsequent variations are properly referred back to the original authority.

Finally, there is the question of management information and management reporting. In following transactions through one would take cognizance of available information which from a business control point of view is important to management and ensure that such detail as is necessary is being reported.

Perhaps I may now quote two examples of how my own company is utilizing this approach to internal audit. The company is primarily a marketing and distributing one and is not engaged in manufacture. This, however, should not detract from the suitability of this approach in other types of business.

Auditing a Contract

The first example relates to package reconditioning contracts which had been made a number of years previously, the control of which had not been studied or audited for some time. Starting from an audit of stock control of reconditioned packages received from the reconditioners, the system was followed downwards through the accounts payable procedure to the original detail of the contracts themselves and the following points came to light:

(1) Although from a stock control point of view

packages received tied in with the stocks at the receiving points, it was discovered that the invoices were paid by decentralized accounting points where there was no control over the individual receipts.

(2) Certain packages were scrapped without reference to the company and in many instances no proceeds received for the sale. The contract itself did not state how this should be dealt with.

(3) Contractors submitted their invoices in different forms which made the actual checking difficult.

(4) The reconditioners submitted periodical stock statements in different forms which gave very little worth-while information.

(5) In one instance, although not specifically stated in the contract, the reconditioner had been given the option to buy for his own use a certain number of reconditioned packages each week.

(6) Packages were being returned to reconditioners from distant points incurring high freight rates, only to be scrapped or sold at a price below transport costs by the reconditioners..

(7) Little or no information was being passed to the controlling distribution department to appraise them of the situation.

Action Taken

As a result of the audit, the following action is being taken:

(1) All payments of invoices to be centralized, in order that they can be related to the overall stock control of reconditioned packages.

(2) Reconditioners to be asked to submit both invoices and stock statements on a prescribed standard form which will enable the movement of packages to be followed and invoices readily checked.

(3) The same standard forms of invoices and stock statements to provide a basis to report control features for the distribution department.

(4) The sale of products in a package which, on return, will have little or no value, to be treated as non-returnable and the price adjusted accordingly.

(5) Spot checks to be made periodically by distribution department's representative to ensure that there is no further use for packages considered as scrap.

(6) Reconditioned packages surplus to the company's requirements to be sold on the best market available.

The second example relates to changes in audit procedure necessitated by the introduction of a computer which as a first stage will process all delivery tickets of products and provide invoices to the customer. In this case we have had to make a reappraisal of the audit approach.

First, I must detail the computer procedure which, briefly, is as follows:

(1) Batches of delivery tickets with a control document showing quantities only, are dispatched daily from the delivery point to the computer centre.

(2) These are processed at the computer centre, which holds product price record and customer master record tapes, to produce invoices.

(3) The customer master record contains the customer's terms of trade, rebate and discounts (if any), etc., and is up-dated periodically on advice from decentralized offices when changes take place.

The problem was to ensure that customers were correctly invoiced, customer master records and product records were accurate and amendments were properly authorized.

Audit Programme for Computer-produced Accounts

As will be seen, it would be difficult to audit any particular section of the procedure in isolation and the following audit programme has been devised:

(1) The audit team will obtain from the computer centre an audit list of all tickets processed from the delivery point for a predetermined number of consecutive days.

(2) Armed with this list the audit team visit the delivery point, obtain the delivery tickets relating to the dates in question and check that all tickets quantity-wise have been processed by the computer, i.e. invoices produced, and that these sales are reflected in the stock control account.

(3) Certain tickets are rejected during the initial process run for one reason or another and appear separately on the audit list. These rejected tickets are followed through to ensure that they are subsequently processed and to ascertain the reasons for initial rejection.

(4) Select at random from the audit list a predetermined percentage of customer invoices which are then checked as to the correctness for rebates, price extension, etc., by reference to the master file of customer details at the accounting point.

(5) These same invoices are then checked through to the customers' account to ensure that they had been properly posted.

This is only the beginning of our approach to auditing of computer-produced accounts but as the computer takes on further procedures, e.g. sales proceeds, accounts receivable, etc., so will the audit programme be developed to incorporate the new features on similar lines.

Weekly Notes

COST ACCOUNTANTS' NEW PRESIDENT

MR. HARRY HODGSON, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., comptroller of Fisons Ltd, has been elected President of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants for the year 1965–66.

Mr Hodgson, who is aged 57, was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1929 and thereafter spent some years in the London office of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. He became chief accountant and secretary of the General Railway Signal Company Ltd in 1934 and spent nine years with the company before joining Robson, Morrow & Co in 1943. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants in 1951 and took up his present appointment as comptroller of Fisons in 1958.

Mr H. Hodgson

Mr Hodgson has served as a member of the Council of the Institute since 1956, being Chairman of the Law and Parliamentary Committee from 1959 and a member of the Executive Committee since that date. He has also served on the Finance, Cost Consultancy, Overseas Affairs, Public Relations, and Ways and Means Committees.

Since 1963, Mr Hodgson has represented the Federation of British Industries as a member of a joint working party with the British Institute of Management, the efforts of which resulted in the establishment of the Management Consulting Services Information Bureau announced earlier this year.

Mr William Liddell Spalding, B.SC.(ECON.), C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., assistant secretary of Decca Ltd, and Mr Charles Ernest Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., director in charge of buying and management services of the Metal Box Co Ltd, have been elected Vice-Presidents of the Institute.

CURRENCY REFORM MUST BE INCLUDED

THE announcement on Monday by the President of the Board of Trade that the United Kingdom is to change over to the metric system of weights and measures, while admirable in itself, makes no reference to a parallel reform of even greater urgency and, that is the adoption of decimal currency.

Time and again the Government of the day has been reminded of the need to bring Britain's monetary denominations into line with the systems now used by virtually the rest of the world, but a series of Royal Commissions, several semi-official investigations and reports, private members' Bills and a stream of articles and references in the Press have all failed to spark off the necessary action. The previous Government, at long last, positively accepted the principle of decimal coinage. Will the present Government have a sufficiently long life to introduce and carry through the consequent legislation?

It is estimated that it will take ten years to complete the switch to the metric system of weights and measures. In that interval there may be several changes of Government but, for the sake of the country's economic future, it is sincerely to be hoped that whoever happens to be in office will see to it that currency reform forms an integral part of any comprehensive conversion plan. The country, having made the all important decision, cannot afford to take only half-measures to implement it.

FINANCE BILL CONCESSIONS

LAST week we referred to the points made about clause 12 of the Finance Bill (disallowance of covenanted payments for surtax purposes) in a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer by the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The letter stressed the position of retirement pensions to former partners (or their dependants) of professional firms. On May 20th, the House of Commons debated a proposed amendment on this topic which was unsuccessful. However, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury said:

> 'It is not right that partners should be saddled with sleeping partners in retirement. There are obvious advantages in his being able to break free from the partnership in the interests of its smooth working, and I am satisfied that there is a real problem here and that we should look at it.
> 'I am advised that there may also be other categories of people we should look at, for example, the case of payments made by a husband to a divorced or separated wife. Where these are made under a Court order, the problem does not arise, but frequently there are covenants entered into which are not made by Court order and there seems to be no point in framing our tax laws so that people have to obtain a Court decision when the matter can be disposed of by agreement.
> 'There may also be problems in connection with the purchase of business where, I believe, covenants of this kind are used. I hope the Committee will not think that I am being evasive when I say I cannot reach a final conclusion at this stage.
> 'I will undertake to look at this further with a view to bringing forward an amendment at the report stage, which I hope will find favour with the hon.

member and which will be aimed at meeting this situation. . . .'

Last week we also reported the step taken by the Life Offices to have clause 27 of the Finance Bill modified. In this case, progress has been more rapid. The Chancellor has actually put down an amendment of clause 27 which meets the Life Offices' criticisms. In other words, capital gains on life policies will not be chargeable except where the gainer has purchased the policy from someone else.

ENTERTAINMENT EXPENSES - FACT AND FICTION

FROM 1 a.m. to nearly 5 a.m. on May 21st the House of Commons debated clause 14 of the Finance Bill, which disallows entertainment expenses. The clause was finally passed without a division, but not until after some remarkable things were said. Mr Diamond, the Chief Secretary, quoted a former Conservative Chancellor as saying that he thought there must be something behind the strong feeling that some business entertainment went further than purely business motives. He went on to give some lurid examples of enormous entertainment expenses which the Revenue had allowed but denied that under the existing law they could have been disallowed. He was thus in effect saying that these expenses were indeed incurred wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trades in question; in other words that the expense did not go further than purely business motives. He added, somewhat surprisingly, that the Revenue never interferes; that it would be quite impossible for the Revenue to suggest that a company is paying too much for a particular business item. This runs counter to a great deal of experience, and even to well-known reported cases where the expenditure claimed has been scaled down by the Appeal Commissioners, as being excessive. When one considers the extraordinary, and surely exceedingly rare, examples which the Chief Secretary gave, one can only say that here again are examples of the Revenue swallowing grouse moor camels while they strain at the gnat of, say, a barrister's £137 travelling expenses during the vacation (Newsom v. Robertson (31 A.T.C. 429)).

AUDITORS' ALLEGED NEGLIGENCE

A RECENT case heard in Cape Town involved allegations of negligence by an insurance company against its auditors (The Colonial Mutual Life Assurance Society v. H. D. Wright and Others). A dishonest employee of the Society had obtained money by inserting fictitious names in the list of the Society's employees and the auditors were sued for this money. However, the case was settled after a three days' hearing, each side withdrawing its allegations. The case is reported in The South African Chartered Accountant for April 1965, which contains an editorial on the topic.

THE DIRECTORS' WARNING

SHORTLY after the Government came into office, The Director, journal of the Institute of Directors, carried an editorial in which it questioned whether the business community should co-operate with a Government so unsympathetic to its outlook. Recently the Institute has come out openly with a trenchant attack on the Government's economic policy. This it regards as undermining free enterprise which, it avers, is the whole basis of our way of life. In a pamphlet entitled The Assault on Free Enterprise, the Institute contends that the Government is pursuing socialist policies with heavy taxation and discriminating against profits which will make it difficult to raise new capital. In the words of the booklet, 'at every stage success is penalized, ambition curbed, and enterprise stillborn'.

In a week-end speech, Mr Brown replied to this attack, contending that it was misconceived and the Government recognized that in the foreseeable future private and public enterprise would need to work in harmony.

There is no doubt that public enterprise cannot hope to replace free enterprise undertakings in the short run. But there will be many in the business community who fear that, in the long run, the public sector will expand rapidly at the expense of the private sector. Furthermore, the Government has yet to explain how its sharp attack on profits and investment income can be squared with an avowed belief in the function of profits. Many will feel that the Institute of Directors' pamphlet overdraws somewhat the present threat, but it is idle to pretend that it is non-existent.

INVESTIGATION INTO EUROTRUST LIMITED

ON May 20th the Board of Trade published the report of the inspector appointed by them under section 165 of the Companies Act, 1948, to investigate the affairs of Eurotrust Limited. The inspector is Mr Percival Charles Hewett, F.C.A. He was appointed on December 5th, 1963, following complaints from certain minority shareholders that they had not been given all the information with regard to the company's affairs that they might reasonably expect. The company issued a prospectus in June 1962 but it was withdrawn when one of the persons named as directors protested that he had not been approached to become a director. On the issue of a second prospectus in September 1962 some £10,000 was received from the public and was paid into the company's account with Merchant Guaranty Holdings Ltd, which was shown as the company's banker in the prospectus. Merchant Guaranty apparently paid the cheques into its own account with the Midland Bank Ltd. On January 21st, 1963, the Court ordered Merchant Guaranty to be wound up and the company lost the use of the £10,000. In the event it never traded. Mr Hewitt says he thinks there is little doubt that the action of the directors in banking the moneys with Merchant Guaranty was not in the best interests of the outside shareholders of the company. He adds that the use of this money in September to October 1962 was no doubt of considerable assistance to Merchant Guaranty.

INTERFIRM COMPARISONS ON MARKETING

AN interfirm comparison on marketing efficiency is to be organized by the Centre for Interfirm Comparisons Ltd in the food industry. Basically the same ideas will be used as those which have already been applied to comparisons of management ratios. In this case, of course, the data to be compared will be concerned with marketing. It will include differences in selling methods, in sales outlets, in the emphasis placed on different forms of sales promotion and in salesmen's remuneration.

Marketing costs will also be covered. Participants will be able to compare their own performance with others. The comparison will not be a once only exercise. It is hoped to organize it on a continuing basis so that firms can compare their trend of performance. The project is being organized jointly by the Food Manufacturers' Federation and the Institute of Marketing and will be carried out by the Centre for Interfirm Comparisons.

This will be a most interesting application of interfirm comparison techniques to a new field. The industry chosen is in the consumer goods sector. In due course it should be possible to apply it to capital goods, notably where there is a significant export market involved.

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS

WHY was the Finance Bill not available for sale in Manchester on April 27th when it was available in London? This question is to be put to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Commons on June 22nd by Mr Joel Barnett (Labour, Heywood and Royton) who will ask for an assurance – in view of the importance of Manchester as a major commercial centre – that in future when Bills or other important documents are published, the provinces are treated no differently from London.

Among other questions put down for the same day is one from Mr Edward Milne (Labour, Blyth) who will ask what claims against income tax can be made by travel agents or tour operators who fly holiday-makers to their destinations free of charge and only require payment for hotel accommodation.

Next Thursday Mr George Brown, the First Secretary of State, is to be asked by a Labour member, Mr William Hamling (Woolwich, West), whether he will take steps to invite directors of limited liability companies to exercise restraint in the payment of dividends.

LAG IN SALARIES

ACCORDING to the latest survey of executive salaries carried out by Associated Industrial Consultants, those in the United Kingdom are increasing more slowly than in the rest of Europe. It also shows, as has been said before often enough but without supporting figures, that export sales executives in the United Kingdom are slower to get salary rises than in other countries.

On the other hand, British executives are well off for company cars but there is an ironic touch as the Finance Bill is steered this year through Parliament that only the French appear to be worse off for expense allowances. The industries in the United Kingdom where salaries are rising fastest are chemicals and allied industries. The poorest comparative performance seems to be put up by textiles and the distributive trades. An unexpected finding is, perhaps, that executives in large firms in the United Kingdom move more readily between jobs than elsewhere in Europe.

Among the figures compiled are those for accountants. Since 1960 the median salary of a chief accountant in the United Kingdom has risen by 28·5 per cent to £2,550. France has been catching up with a rise of 41·7 per cent to £2,190. That of a cost accountant in the United Kingdom has gone up by 17·8 per cent to £1,650 but in France by 48·8 per cent to £2,715.

WHERE DO SAVINGS GO?

THE savings figures published with the national income statistics are among the least reliable of official estimates and any light which is thrown on them is to be welcomed. The latest issue of the Department of Economic Affairs' progress report deals with savings and how they have been used over recent years. It points out that except for 1962 total savings have risen steadily over the last decade.

Savings come from three sources. In 1964 companies accounted for 49 per cent, the personal sector for 30 per cent and Government for the remaining 21 per cent. Savings by companies are undistributed income after tax; those by Government consist of surpluses of revenue over expenditure, including the surpluses of the National Insurance Funds; personal savings are the surplus of personal disposable income after taxes and national insurance contributions over personal consumption. But personal savings include much more than incomes of individuals. They also cover the surpluses of all unincorporated business concerns which includes professional people, one-man businesses and charitable trusts.

Savings in this last sector vary a good deal from year to year. They have been increasing recently but are not yet back to the level of 1961. In 1964 a high proportion of such savings went into house purchase but the big flow has been into life assurance and superannuation funds. There is good evidence that sales of securities by this sector have in the last year or two been heavy and that there is a substantial switching going on of security holdings from direct to indirect ownership through assurance companies, unit trusts and other financial intermediaries.

THE capital investment possibly needed over the next twenty-five years in the oil industry is in the region of £125,000 million. By 1990 the free world may need three times as much oil and natural gas as it does now. These estimates were among the facts and opinions given by Mr John Loudon, senior managing director of the Royal Dutch-Shell group, in the Cadman Memorial Lecture to the Institute of Petroleum in London last week.

He thought that there was no doubt that there were sufficient reserves in the oil industry to meet this demand but the industry would have to remain profitable in order to find the necessary capital. This means that Governments in both producing and consuming countries must not be too rapacious in their tax demands on the industry. In other words he sees this as a very capital-intensive industry which needs private enterprise and a satisfactory rate of profitability to find the capital to plough back into the industry – as has happened in the past.

Developments which might come about in the next twenty-five years might include more oil from under the sea using equipment operating under water at over 2,000 feet, and new drilling techniques.

This is My Life . . .

by an Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 278

IT had been a disastrous evening. Our morale was shattered, our prestige ruined beyond repair. We senior members of our local branch of accountants retired crestfallen to the bar, almost incapable of acknowledging the friendly nods of mine host, and sank down on the red leather benchseat in the furthest corner, there to drown our sorrows five fathoms deep.

Less than three hours previously we had held the last function of the season, a talk to the branch by a celebrity passing through. His career had been distinguished in politics and business, and his address had been in turn grave and gay, informative and inspirational. No better speaker had been booked for months; the programme committee had been congratulated on landing such a big fish. In conclusion just seventeen people had attended to hear him.

Why, we brooded, why? Why did so few appreciate how much they owed to so many brilliant speakers over the years? At every function organized by our own or by our brother organizations, the attendances had been painfully sparse; was the day of the lecture finished for ever?

The first round was drunk in despondent silence, but, with the second, tongues were loosened. Perhaps it was the sunny evening, which might have lured the athletic characters to waste their youth chasing little white balls around the grass. Perhaps it was the insidious soul-killing addiction to television; 'That damn Fugitive was on tonight', muttered the branch secretary, 'he's always a draw.' Perhaps it was the exhibition at the town hall, or our omission to telephone urgent reminders in advance to suburban members . . . perhaps accountants were just becoming bored with being lectured to!

The celebrity had been jolly sporting about it. 'Could happen to a bishop,' he had laughed when our committee members apologized for the meagre crowd. He had sat down, beckoned us into a close circle, and chatted freely; he hadn't batted an eyelid when two big men in the back row, realizing suddenly that we weren't the Archaeological Society, walked out on tiptoe.

By the third round we had finished with excuses and recriminations and were planning ahead. What definite innovations could we provide as an opening attraction for next season? Maybe a panel discussion, carefully including one crusty old misanthrope who could be relied upon to denounce all and sundry, thus entertaining the students? Or a joint debate with another organization, perhaps the local solicitors' society, I suggested. These legal eagles tended to be at once eloquent and self-assured; we could tempt them by offering some sort of president's prize as an inducement. Our president, a perky little man of erudite but niggardly reputation, demurred hastily.

Somebody rescued him by recommending two vital symposia on 'Whither the profession', or 'Balance-sheet fallibility', interrupted by the oldest member who asserted abruptly that the real problem was that so many misguided young chaps deserted the profession for industry. 'Wanting to be top management consultants with that trans-Atlantic jargon before they can distinguish revenue from capital on their tax allocations,' he commenced; a gambit which instantly transformed our dignified discussion into noisy argument. It's remarkable how some accountants react emotionally to references to consultants, those knowing least invariably talking the loudest. Everybody had a story to tell and a determination to tell it, and by closing time all that we had achieved was unanimous dissension. A follow-up meeting was arranged as we left.

Come to think of it, I'm getting rather tired of repetitively argumentative colleagues. Perhaps I'll stay in and watch TV that night; I rather like the Fugitive.

Taxation Cases

Iswera v. Ceylon Commissioner of Inland Revenue

In the Privy Council – March 30th, 1965

(Before Lord REID, Lord MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST, Lord PEARCE, Lord DONOVAN and Lord PEARSON)

Income tax – Purchase of land – Retention of part for purchaser's own residence – Sale of balance in lots – Whether adventure in the nature of trade – Income Tax Ordinance, sections 2, 5, and 6.

The appellant wished to reside near the school which her daughters were attending, and she tried to buy a site for the erection of a house. The vendor would only sell a much larger area of land, and the appellant purchased this area for Rs450,000. She borrowed the deposit, Rs45,000, and divided the area into twelve building lots, nine of which she sold to sub-purchasers for Rs434,725, and kept two lots as the site for her house and one lot for re-conveyance to the vendor. Out of the Rs434,725 the balance of the purchase price, Rs405,000, was paid, so that in the end the appellant had to find only Rs15,275 of her own money, and she had the site for her own house. The market value of that site was Rs87,040.

Assessments to income tax were made on the appellant's husband (since deceased) in respect of the difference between the Rs87,040 and the Rs15,275, namely, Rs71,765, on the footing that the transaction was an adventure in the nature of trade. It was agreed by the appellant, without prejudice to the question of principle, that the net profit she gained was Rs66,331.

The Board of Review affirmed the assessment, and its decision was in turn affirmed by the Supreme Court of Ceylon.

Held: although the Board of Review might have taken a different view of the facts, it was impossible to hold that they were not entitled to reach the conclusion they did reach.

Laidler v. Perry

In the House of Lords – April 8th, 1965

(Before Lord REID, Lord MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST, Lord HODSON, Lord DONOVAN and Lord PEARSON)

Income tax – Schedule E – Voucher from employer – Voucher spendable at particular shop – Whether amount of voucher an emolument – Whether a benefit in kind – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 156, 161 – Finance Act, 1956, section 10.

The appellant was a salaried employee of Associated Lead Manufacturers Ltd (Associated), a subsidiary of Goodlass Wall & Lead Industries Ltd (Goodlass Wall). Associated was formed by a merger of a number of family businesses, in which there was a long history of making gifts in kind to the staff at Christmas, and after the formation of Associated it was decided that that practice should continue. The reason for the practice was that it helped to maintain a feeling of happiness among the staff, and to foster a spirit of personal relationship between the staff and the management. The junior employees were paid at the normal rates, and the remuneration of senior staff compared favourably with that paid by other employers. All salaries were reviewed annually, and special good work was remunerated by money bonuses. The staff were given presents in kind up to Christmas 1938; but as this practice became impossible during the Second World War, they were given national savings certificates every Christmas.

In December 1947, the directors of Goodlass Wall caused a special cash bonus to be paid to each member of the staff of the group as a participation in the group's exceptional earnings in 1946 and 1947.

In October 1948, the directors of Goodlass Wall resolved that Christmas gifts amounting to £10 each should be made to the employees of all members of the group. It was left to the managing director of Goodlass Wall to determine the form of these gifts. Subsequently each member of the staff was asked to state in which shop he would prefer to spend vouchers of £10 each. When these wishes were known, vouchers for £10 were purchased and sent to the staff with a personal letter of good wishes from the chairman. This practice was intended to restore the pre-war practice of giving presents in kind, but to do so in a way which would overcome post-war shortages of gifts and the larger size of the group. The practice had continued ever since. Employees who had been employed for more than ten months were given vouchers for £10 regardless of their remunerations, and those employed for less than ten months were given vouchers for something less than £10, again regardless of their remunerations. The vouchers were given without regard to personal circumstances, the personalties of the employees or the way in which they carried out their duties. They were also given to all staff pensioners. They were not given to manual workers, but the latter were given a Christmas dinner in the canteen. Each voucher was exchangeable for goods to the value of it at the store named on the voucher.

The appellant was employed as research manager by Associated, and he was within Chapter II of Part VI of the Income Tax Act, 1952. In addition to his salary he had received year by year a cash bonus, which was paid after deduction of tax. From 1955–60 he received a Christmas voucher for £10 to be spent at Harrods Ltd, where he would not normally make purchases. He used the vouchers to purchase gifts which he would not have bought in the ordinary way. He regarded the giving of the vouchers as a gesture by his employer, and different from the bonuses, which were a reward for effort.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant (i) that the vouchers were not rewards for services, and were not emoluments within Schedule E; (ii) that if they were emoluments the amount assessable was something less than £10; (iii) that the vouchers were not assessable pursuant to section 161 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. It was contended by the respondent (i) that the vouchers were emoluments of the appellant and were assessable under Schedule E; (ii) that the amount assessable was the face value of the voucher, namely, £10; (iii) that the vouchers were benefits or facilities within section 161. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Shop and Store Developments Ltd v. C.I.R.

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Stamp duty – Conveyance or transfer on sale – Transfer of beneficial interest from one company to another – Whether connected with extraneous arrangements – Finance Act, 1930, section 42 – Finance Act, 1938, section 50.

In 1959 the members of a family held all the shares in the appellant company and in another company. They decided to convert the appellant company into a public company. Basically the arrangement was (a) that the members of the family agreed to sell 1,078,800 of their 1,080,000 shares in the appellant company to the other company at par, the price being £269,700 in cash; (b) that the other company (the seller company) was to sell to the appellant company certain freehold and leasehold properties for £984,571, to be satisfied by the issue of 2,920,000 shares of 5*s* each in the appellant company, i.e. the equivalent of 6*s* 5*d* a share; and (c) that the other company would sell 1,200,000 of those shares to an issuing house at 6*s* 5*d* a share in cash, the total price being £385,000. The various transactions comprised in this arrangement were carried out. The sale at (b) was completed by three transfers, an assignment and a conveyance (the transfers). The £269,700 under (a) was paid to the members of the family, out of the £385,000 received by the seller company as at (c).

The instruments involved in the transaction were submitted to the Controller of Stamps, and it was claimed that they were exempt from stamp duty by virtue of section 42 of the Finance Act, 1930, in that the effect of them was to convey or transfer beneficial interests in properties from one limited liability company to another such company; and that the seller company was the beneficial owner of not less than 90 per cent of the issued share capital of the appellant company. It was claimed that the documents were not executed in such a way as to be excluded from relief by section 50 of the Finance Act, 1938. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue considered that the instruments were not exempt from duty pursuant to section 42 of the Finance Act, 1930, and they assessed the duty in a total amount of £19,693.

Held: the consideration received by the seller company consisted of fully-paid shares in the appellant company; and the fact that the seller company retained only 1,720,000 of the shares in the appellant company, was not consideration received by the seller company for the transfers.

C.I.R. v. Cleary

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)
April 13th, 1965
(Before Mr Justice PENNYCUICK)

Income tax – Transaction in securities – Sale of shares in a company – Purchaser company also controlled by taxpayer – Whether tax advantage obtained – Whether distribution of profit – Finance Act, 1936, section 21 – Finance Act, 1940, sections 43, 46, 50 – Finance Act, 1960, sections 28, 43.

In the first half of 1961 the respondent and her sister owned equally the whole of the issued share capital, namely, 200,000 shares of 1*s* each, in a company. The company had a credit balance on profit and loss account of £180,000, and it had a credit of £130,000 at its bank. The appellant and her sister also owned equally the whole of the issued shares, namely, 50,000 shares of £1 each, in another company. In July 1961, they each sold 22,000 shares in the second company to the first company for £60,500 in cash. That was the full value of the shares. The appellant and her sister continued to own all the issued shares in the first-mentioned company, which in turn then held 44,000 shares in the second company.

It was contended for the appellants that the respondent had obtained a tax advantage, within section 28 of the Finance Act, 1960, consisting of the avoidance of an assessment, or possible assessment, to income tax, which would have been made if £60,500 had been distributed to her by way of dividend. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that no tax advantage within section 28 had been obtained. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

PRACTICE ADMINISTRATION

Ask yourself the following questions:

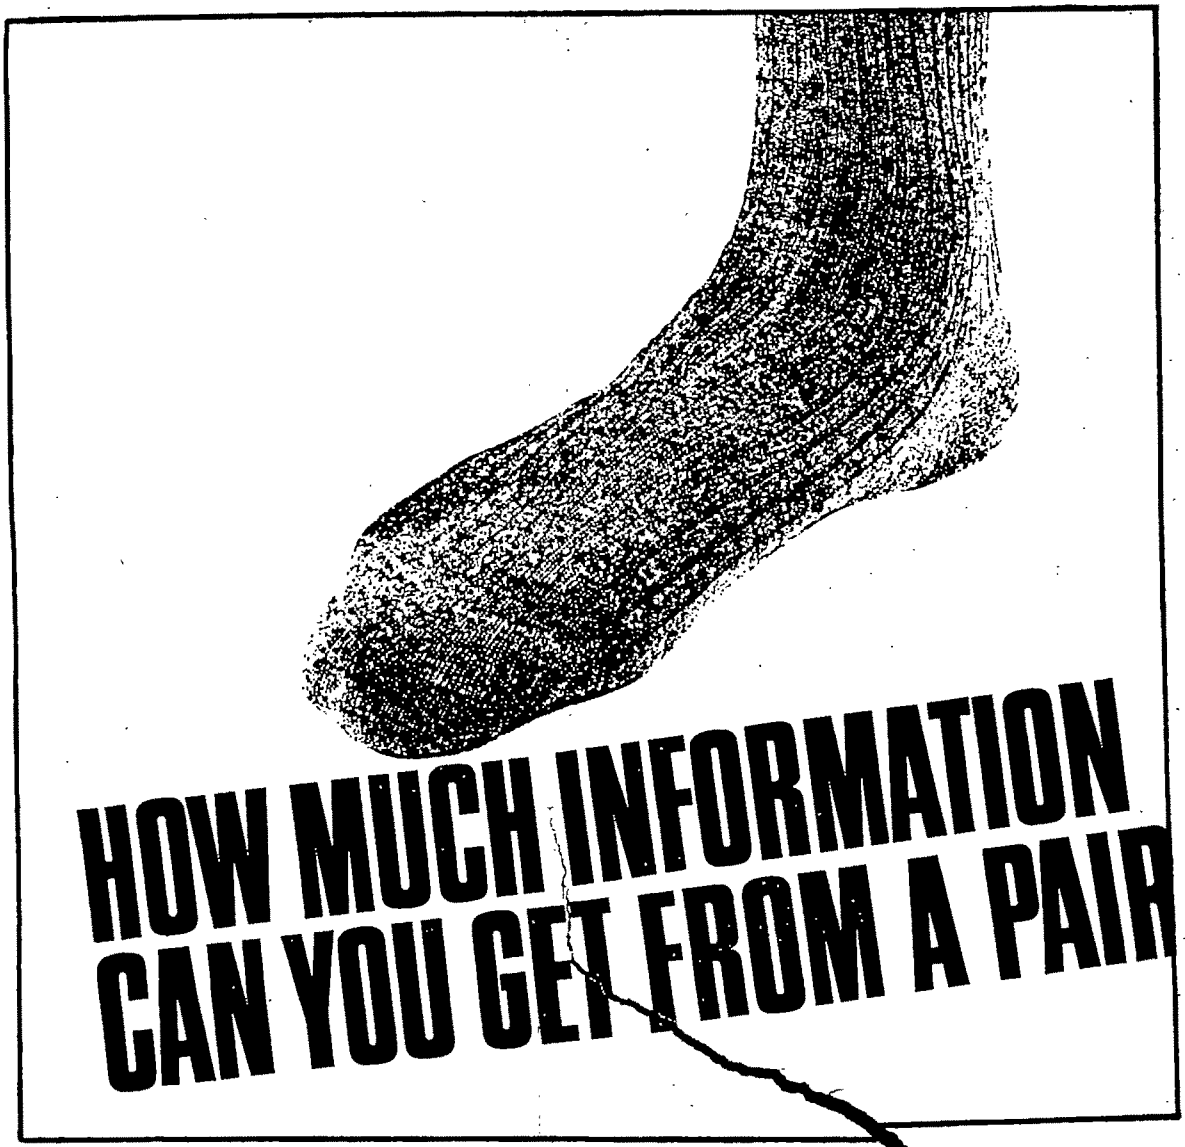
Are you getting an adequate reward?

What sort of firm would you like to build up by 1975?

Would you benefit by merging with another firm?

Who will take over when you retire?

How do you value your work in progress?



How efficiently is your office being run?

The answer to these and other vital questions about practice administration are to be found in a new series of ten booklets now in course of preparation by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

The first booklet in the series – The development of an accounting practice – by Mr E. Kenneth Wright, M.A., F.C.A., has already appeared and the second booklet – Professional practice insurance – by Mr G. R. Appleyard, F.C.A., will be published on June 1st, 1965. The charge for each booklet in the series is 5*s* post free.

Other booklets in the series will be published at approximately monthly intervals. For full particulars and order forms write to the Secretary:

Associated Biscuit

AT the end of the annual report of The Associated Biscuit Manufacturers Ltd, from which this week's reprint is taken, four pages are given to 'Some of the group's specialities' – the products of the main subsidiaries, Huntley & Palmer, W. & R. Jacob & Co (Liverpool), Peek Frean & Co, in the biscuit sphere, Meltis in sweets, and Huntley, Boorne & Stevens making boxes and light engineering products.

Another of the 'specialities' of the Associated Biscuit report in the past has been the marked absence of what used to be called 'extra-statutory' information before it became accepted as normal procedure – the provision of turnover or sales figures, profits as a percentage of sales and of capital employed, earnings cover, and the ten-year record. This year, however, shareholders are told the group's turnover for the first time.

In fact the chairman, Mr Rupert E. Carr, says: 'Following the recommendation of the chairman of the Stock Exchange we are happy to publish that our turnover figures for 1964 were £37,805,000 against £35,452,000'. One wonders why, if the directors are so happy to give a turnover figure at the behest of the Stock Exchange, they were so unhappy apparently about giving it before.

The answer came a few days after the issue of the Associated company's accounts, when the rival United Biscuits company also provided turnover figures for the first time, which rather smacks of Mr Macy and Mr Gimbel.

Of the 6·6 per cent increase in turnover, 2·6 per cent arose from the turnover of new overseas trading concerns acquired during the year, principally by Peek Frean (Canada). The residual increase in turnover of goods of the group's own manufacture was 4 per cent, shared between home trade, export trade and overseas manufacturing companies.

Despite this rise in turnover, profits, it will be seen, were down by as much as £882,265 to £1,289,399. The setback was due to higher costs in the home trade, mainly in materials prices where the effect on earnings was much greater than anticipated. Mr Carr explains the impact of rising higher prices by saying 'taking the home biscuit, cake and confectionery operations as whole, if we had paid for our 1964 usage of materials at prices obtaining in 1963, our costs would have been less by an amount of £1,073,000'.

Biscuit prices were not increased until late in 1964 and early this year, as an earlier planned move, the Avonmouth works were closed at the end of 1964 and production transferred to London. The net cost of the move, £133,549 after allowing tax relief of £299,000, is shown in the accounts.

Own Arithmetic

The dividend is being maintained at 16 per cent, despite the profit fall, in view of the fact, as Mr Carr says, 'that up-to-date budgets for 1965 show a fair measure of recovery and the steps taken to increase prices and reduce operating and overhead costs reflected in them are becoming effective'. Mr Carr also admits that it is evident that with corporation tax at a rate of 40 per cent 'it would be necessary for the company substantially to improve its profitability if there is to be a satisfactory cover for the current rate of dividend'.

In Mr Carr's statement, therefore, there are references to turnover, costs, dividend cover and profitability. Turnover is shown but costs are stated merely to the extent that higher prices of materials cost the group £1,073,000 at home, and the shareholder is left to do his own arithmetic on dividend cover and profits as a percentage of turnover and employed funds.

But now that the extra-statutory ice has been broken, perhaps next year's accounts will go further. The Associated Biscuit experience in the past year must surely have demonstrated to the directors just how necessary figures are as part of the explanation of the company's position.

Data Processing Centre

The higher prices to which reference has already been made were the first increases of any consequence by the group for about ten years. Productivity in the biscuit industry is undoubtedly high and, in an attempt to push it higher, the company has engaged a firm of consultants to advise on long-term plans to obtain maximum efficiency from production investment.

The company already uses a computer. There is a group data processing centre at Aintree and, using

Land and buildings are stated at cost, with the exception of the land of one overseas subsidiary, which is included at the sterling equivalent, £92,000, of the valuation adopted in 1964.

4 Stocks of Produce and Materials

Stocks of the group companies are included at cost, computed on bases considered appropriate to the circumstances of each business, or at realisable value if lower.
The bases used in arriving at cost were changed in 1964, but the effect on the profit of the period was not material.

5 Taxation

The charge for taxation in the profit and loss account has been arrived at after deducting relief of £97,000 for investment allowances (1963 £81,000).
The amounts set aside for future taxation, including tax deferred by capital allowances, which are arrived at after taking into account relief in respect of charges arising from factory and office concentration, have been based on current rates of income tax and profits tax.

6 Capital Reserves

Below are details of the movements of the reserves:	The Group £	Consolidation £
Balance at 29th December, 1963		804,997
Add: Surplus on revaluation of land of a subsidiary		85,427
Development rebate (overseas)		4,602

7 Overseas Subsidiaries

The accounts of one subsidiary were made up to 31st March, 1964, of another to 30th September, 1964, and of three others to 3rd October, 1964. The Directors consider that to change these companies' financial years to coincide with that of The Associated Biscuit Manufacturers Limited would cause unreasonable delay in the preparation of the accounts.
Overseas interests have been expressed in sterling on the following bases:
(i) As regards fixed assets and depreciation thereof, at the rates ruling at the dates of acquisition.
(ii) As regards current assets and liabilities, at the rates ruling at the 3rd January, 1965.

8 Commitments for Capital Expenditure

The estimated amounts of commitments for capital expenditure, including £264,000 representing part of a joint and several commitment of £552,000 undertaken in conjunction with other companies, and payable over a period of years, were as follows:

The Associated Biscuit Manufacturers Limited	Nil	(1963, Nil)
The Group	£644,000	(1963, £616,000)

9 Contingent Liabilities

Contingent liabilities in respect of bills discounted and guarantees of a bank overdraft amounted to £49,000 (1963, £40,000).

an IBM 1460 computer, all sales accounting work for the Jacob and Peak Frean divisions have been absorbed and the work of the Huntley & Palmer division will be fully absorbed by early 1966. The chairman says 'we are already experiencing the benefits of reduced administrative costs within the group from this operation'.

Another indication of the group preoccupation with costs and profitability is the concern expressed by Mr Carr about the long-term prospects of the Meltis company. High sugar prices meant a loss by Meltis in 1964 – at least Mr Carr says 'trading has not been profitable' – and the company's 'whole future is under close study'.

Mr Carr's report, as a whole, gives the impression of a group intensely concerned with the need for the highest possible level of productivity and equally intense in its effort to attain it. More surprising still, then, that the accounts do not provide those extra facts and figures which help to demonstrate the productivity rate achieved.

CITY NOTES

THE two-way pull in the stock-markets persists, continuing to provide short-term changes of mood and emphasis and inevitably failing to induce any definite or reliable trend. After falling more than twelve points in index terms, the equity market has tended to steady but neither the fall nor the levelling out were accompanied by any real volume of business.

While the institutions indulge in a certain amount of chopping and changing in the equity market, the rank and file of investors are bemused into doing nothing, mainly through fear of doing the wrong thing. Preoccupation with the gains tax has numbed the majority of investors into inactivity.

Political and economic factors are pulling in the market in opposite ways. The swing against the Government in the municipal elections and the trend against the Government shown in political polls injects, now and again, some political hope on early General Election grounds.

At the same time, this particular factor tends to be outweighed by a growing impression that an economic shake-out may well develop by next year.

* * * *

IT is fortunate for the London Stock Exchange that Lord Ritchie, although feeling obliged to resign from the chairmanship of the Stock Exchange Council, is to remain on the Council as a deputy chairman. Lord Ritchie became more chairman than stockbroker during his term of office.

His ability to take a broad view and to translate that view into action brought success to an office which has become more in the public eye as the Stock Exchange itself has grown more conscious of its own relationship with the public.

* * * *

WHILE a reduction in Bank rate will be generally welcomed, it will be welcomed particularly in the boardrooms of companies faced with the need to fund bank borrowings. Uncertainty in stock-markets, and the extreme difficulty in making reliable profit forecasts, rules out equity rights issues as a new money-raising method. Funding bank borrowings by loan stock issue or debenture offers is virtually the only refinancing method available.

One company intending to offer a 6¾ per cent loan stock put the coupon up to 7 per cent following consultations with the company's financial advisers. Debenture stocks carrying 7½ per cent interest are also on the market and funding bank borrowing on such a basis is hardly a favourable operation even on a medium-term basis.

Valuation of Existing Assets for D.C.F. Purposes

SIR, – In reply to Mr D. F. Ray's inquiry in your issue of May 8th, I suggest that where existing assets are the only capital invested in a project, a discounted cash flow exercise would serve no useful purpose. The cost to the project is either: (a) the loss of revenue which the assets are earning in their present capacity; or (b) the sale or scrap value of the assets.

Tax allowances/charges are taken into account where applicable.

Example of (a)

Certain plant and machinery is earning £1,100 per annum before tax. The written-down value for tax purposes is £5,000. It is estimated that another five years' useful life remains.

By utilizing the plant and machinery in a new project, it is estimated that annual profits will be increased over the same period. The net cash flow for the new project is as follows:

Year	New Profits	Existing Profits	Additional Tax at 40 per cent	Net Cash Flow
	£	£	£	£
1	2,000	(1,000)	—	1,000
2	2,000	(1,000)	(400)	600
3	2,000	(1,000)	(400)	600
4	2,000	(1,000)	(400)	600
5	2,000	(1,000)	(400)	600
6	—	—	(400)	(400)
	£10,000	(£5,000)	(£2,000)	£3,000

Capital allowances are not included, because they are the same in either case. The company has gained £3,000 net with no additional capital outlay. A D.C.F. exercise is not required to point out the attractiveness of the project.

Example of (b)

Certain plant and machinery can either be sold for £6,000 or utilized in a project which is estimated to give annual profits of £2,000 for five years. The written-down value for tax purposes is £5,000.

The net cash flow for the new project is as follows:

Year	Profits	Tax at 40 per cent	Sale Price Foregone	[1]Tax on Balancing Charge	[1]Tax on Capital Allowances	Net Cash Flow
1	2,000	—	(6,000)	—	—	(4,000)
2	2,000	(800)	—	400	400	2,000
3	2,000	(800)	—	—	320	1,520
4	2,000	(800)	—	—	240	1,440
5	2,000	(800)	—	—	200	1,400
6	—	(800)	—	—	840	40
	£10,000	(£4,000)	(£6,000)	£400	£2,000	£2,400

[1] If the equipment is sold, a balancing charge of £1,000 would arise, consequently, by utilizing the assets, the tax on £1,000 is saved. Similarly, capital allowances can still be claimed if no sale takes place.

The net cash flow shown could, of course, be discounted, but the rate of return would be based on cash lost, by reason of not selling, rather than a return on capital outlay.

Where a new project consists of existing assets in addition to new capital equipment, the net cash flows in the examples should be adjusted by the initial expenditure and the subsequent tax reliefs on capital allowances, in the applicable years. The resultant final net cash flow can then be discounted in the usual way.

Yours faithfully,

Maidstone, Kent. DEREK MAGUIRE.

Payment of Remuneration for Broken Periods

SIR,– I am wondering whether any readers can offer any suggestions regarding the following small but practical problem which must actually affect all commercial accountants at one time or another.

The matter concerns the payment of remuneration to staff for broken periods, e.g. if a man is employed at a salary of £10 per week and works for three days only he is paid £6, i.e. three-fifths of his weekly rate because his contract states that his normal working week is from Monday to Friday inclusive.

If, however, the same man is employed on a monthly basis, his remuneration being £520 per annum payable monthly, there are, of course, three possibilities:

(a) he may be paid three three hundred and sixty-fifths for such three days;

(b) he may be paid three-thirtieths or three thirty-firsts of his monthly rate; or

(c) his equivalent weekly rate may be worked out and he could be paid three-fifths of that.

As you will realize there can be a substantial difference between (a) and (c) and I feel that there must be some correct basis for payment in these cases.

Yours faithfully,

London NW9. F. H. JOHNSON, F.C.A.

Copying Tax Returns

SIR, – Two years ago we bought equipment to photo-copy income tax returns. Last year the Inland Revenue changed the size of the return forms to 9½ by 22½ inches – a size much larger than our equipment will take.

We have consulted many photo-copy specialists who offer a variety of solutions to our problem. Some say sensitive paper of this size is unobtainable; others that a larger size will be cut at no extra cost, some at a small cost.

There are rotary copiers and flat-bed copiers: in some cases using special paper, in others ordinary paper.

We are told that two German firms produce all the special paper used in the machines: yet recently a representative advised us to use a British paper in the machine he tried to sell us.

Exactly how do other accountants take copies of returns? Is there a quick and cheap method?

Yours faithfully,

Rossendale, Lancs. PROCTER & DUKE.

Proposed Association of Accountancy Lecturers

SIR, – For some considerable time many accountants who are engaged in lecturing in accountancy and allied subjects at technical colleges have felt a need to form an association which will be of benefit to the profession. Ideas on such an association were discussed at an educational conference held on January 23rd at this college, a brief report of which appeared in The Accountant of January 30th.

I would like through your columns to bring to the attention of your readers brief details of an inaugural conference to launch such an association. This meeting will be held on June 19th, at 10 a.m., at this college and lecturers in accountancy are invited to attend. The speakers will include a Ministry of Education official and a senior official from the Controller of Education's Department of the English Electric Group who will speak on the needs of industry from accountancy education.

Those who wish to attend the conference should write to the undersigned as soon as possible when further details will be forwarded.

Yours faithfully,

Double Taxation with No Relief

SIR, – While I am aware (who in the profession is not?) that 'there is no equity in income tax', would it be too much to hope that there might be just a little equity in corporation tax?

As it now stands, Mr Callaghan's Finance Bill incorporates provisions that will mulct every company liable to corporation tax of income tax on at least one year's profit which the company will never receive, as the simple illustrations set out below show.

It would be quite easy to avoid this inequity (or should I say iniquity?) by the application of 'cessation' provisions at 1964–65. May we hope that the Finance Bill will be amended to this end?

Yours faithfully,

Watton-at-Stone, Herts. G. LITTLECHILD.

INSTITUTE CONFERENCE IN LONDON

AT a recent one-day conference at Painters' Hall, London, convened by the Education Committee of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, some sixty representatives from universities, colleges of advanced technology, colleges of further education, the Department of Education and Science, and members of the Institute's Examination and Education Committees discussed the new Certificate in Management Information to be introduced by the Institute (and the Irish Institute). Mr Bertram Nelson, C.B.E., F.C.A., Chairman of the Education Committee, was in the chair.

The first examination for the Certificate will be held in October 1966 and its purpose is to encourage newly-qualified members, whether in practice or industry, to pursue studies in subjects with which they will be increasingly concerned. It is anticipated that the examination will require not less than two years' part-time study; there will, however, be no requirement as to practical experience.

A number of interesting, and perhaps revolutionary, ideas were put forward at the conference and we refer below to some of the principal points made during the discussion.

Purpose of Certificate

It was agreed that the Certificate should serve a broad educational function for newly-qualified members, whether on the practising side of the profession or in industry or commerce. It was pointed out that significantly its title included the word 'information'; it was not limited to accounting techniques.

For most students the syllabus would necessarily involve a considerable extension of technical knowledge as such (papers I and III, for example, would cover substantially new ground) but the emphasis should not be on mere acquisition of knowledge but on the evaluation and application of it, and hence on reasoning power, grasp of underlying principles and problem solving. Subjects in the syllabus such as business organization and financial management were particularly well suited to this treatment. Questions in the examination should reflect both purposes.

In the achievement of these objects the course of study for the examination would be at least as important as the examination itself. Flexibility and variety should be encouraged in the syllabus, in courses and in teaching methods.

Syllabus and Related Matters

It was recognized that the Institute would wish to retain ultimate control over the syllabus and related matters. On the other hand the scheme was a new venture and would be open to modification in the light of experience. Among the possibilities suggested for the future were the following:

(a) To ensure a broad basis and approach, non-accountants (e.g. the economist, operational research or organization and methods specialist) might be members of the committee responsible for the examinations. Experts in these and similar fields should also assist with the marking of papers.

(b) Variety of syllabus within certain limits was to be encouraged in the interests of broad education. Eventually each college might be invited to submit its own syllabus for approval by the Institute. The colleges could also undertake the examining, subject to external moderation by the Institute. A scheme on these lines would closely resemble that already in operation for the national Diploma in Management Studies. Universities and colleges of advanced technology in particular would not find it easy to co-operate if they were merely being asked to work to an external syllabus over which they could exercise no influence.

(c) Work done during the course itself as well as the examination result obtained might be taken into account when finally assessing the student's performance. This practice was widespread and particularly suited for postgraduate education. It could be achieved by requiring students for the certificate to write an essay or dissertation or undertake project work during the course under supervision from the university or college staff. Reports on the student's performance could then be submitted to the Institute.

(d) The syllabus should include study (and examination questions) on ideas which had not been finally established so that students were required to make use of reasoning power, to evaluate new trends, and to express their views on topics which were still under debate in the profession.

(e) The syllabus should include an extended case study of say four hours (not merely part of one paper as at present proposed). It was recognized that for a number of reasons it would be undesirable to introduce into the certificate scheme any condition relating to practical experience and it was felt that the inclusion of a case study would, to some degree, compensate for this.

Syllabus Revision

The following points were also made for consideration in any revision of the present syllabus:

(a) Some attention might be given to the history and development of business and management and the relationship of the past to present, with likely future developments in the field.

(b) The syllabus should include more on the human problems of communication and persuasion which the accountant faces, particularly in industry and commerce. In this connection some study of industrial psychology should be required and this subject would be particularly suitable for the broad approach. It could be brought in either as part of paper I or paper IV or alternatively as an additional paper in itself. There was a fund of knowledge on psychology and sociology which could be studied and it was wrong that such important subjects should be touched upon only incidentally, if at all.

(c) There should be a greater emphasis on mathematics in paper III: this paper should be more practical in character and less descriptive.

(d) As in the present syllabus the division of the subject-matter between the four examination papers should be kept fairly broad and not defined precisely. Exact divisions would be bad educationally and should be avoided.

(e) Examiners must make known to colleges what they wanted from students: a mere syllabus and specimen questions were not sufficient in themselves.

Examination Questions

The questions set in the examination would determine whether the objects earlier referred to were to be achieved or whether the certificate was to be merely a test of technical knowledge. It was felt that some of the specimen questions were unsatisfactory in this respect in that they might encourage learning by rote and be answered by regurgitation of memorized material.

The Chairman of the Institute's Examination Committee said that no one could expect the specimen questions to be perfect. They did, however, represent a sincere attempt to indicate the range and depth of the examination and of the study required; they had perhaps represented a compromise between the need to ensure the extension of technical knowledge on the one hand and, on the other, the requirement to test the application of knowledge. This latter could be tested more readily in some papers than others.

He extended a sincere invitation to those present to submit ideas as to questions. The Examination Committee would be most willing to consider these.

Correspondence Courses

If the aim were only to test knowledge and techniques acquired, correspondence tuition should provide a good and reliable preparation. The broader purposes described earlier, however, could only be achieved with certainty by attendance at courses of oral tuition at university or college.

Correspondence courses would be useful for the student in remote areas who was unable to attend a course of oral tuition. In these cases, the correspondence course should be supplemented by attendance at short residential courses once or twice a year.

The view was expressed by some that attendance at a course of oral tuition in some form or other should be a condition of studentship for the certificate. Others felt that students must be given a free choice in the matter. The Institute should, however, give a strong lead to the extent of recommending oral in preference to correspondence tuition.

Courses of Oral Tuition

Until the certificate had proved its value, employers would probably be reluctant to release students on a full-time or day release basis to attend courses. It was likely, therefore, that in the early stages courses would have to be mainly part-time in the evenings. Evening-only courses were already in operation in some parts of the country and had proved attractive to students. As the scheme developed it was hoped that it would be possible to provide more day release and full-time courses. It was most important that the Institute should give a strong lead, making it clear that even if it were necessary to start on a part-time evening basis, early development was contemplated and encouraged towards varying forms of release, including block release of a residential character.

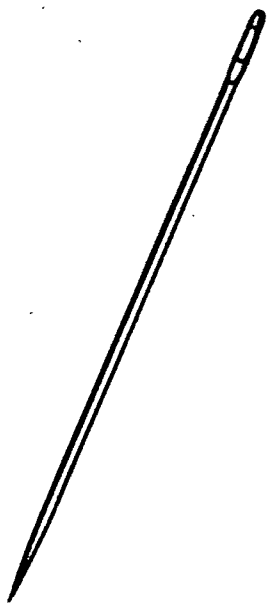
Evening-only courses tended nevertheless to be over-concentrated and every effort should be made to promote courses consisting of say one half-day plus one evening per week. It was recognized that the practising side of the profession, in particular, might find it difficult to release students, though this problem might be eased if the half-day release were arranged either at the beginning or the end of the working week.

Residential Courses

It was important that evening or half-day release courses should be supplemented by attendance at short intensive residential courses (one week or less) say once or twice in each year. Such courses have particular advantages in that they: (a) can provide for the student in outlying areas who might otherwise have to rely entirely on correspondence tuition; (b) can facilitate the mixing of students for the certificate with those in other disciplines; (c) might be more convenient for employers on the practising side of the profession in that the student would be released for a set period at a definite time(s) rather than on a one-day-a-week basis.

By the nature of their organizations, the universities might find it difficult to offer evening only or day release courses (except through their extra-mural departments) but it might well be possible for them to offer residential courses during the university vacation.

Examining



It was important that examiners should be chosen not only from the accountancy profession but also from a wide variety of fields related to the subjects of the examinations.

Examiners should be chosen not only for their expert knowledge of the subject but also for their experience and skill in the technique of examining itself.

The possibility was envisaged that, as the scheme developed, the colleges might themselves conduct the examinations (possibly in groups) and under supervision from the Institute.

Local Co-operation

Much could be achieved by close co-operation at local level between the profession and the universities and colleges assisting with the teaching or examining for the certificate. It was agreed that the education sub-committees of the district societies (which, under the direction of the Institute's Education Committee, already organize courses for articled clerks in conjunction with colleges of further education in their area) should be invited to undertake also the task of liaison and co-operation on problems arising on the examination for the Certificate in Management Information.

SPICER AND PEGLER'S

PRACTICAL AUDITING

Fourteenth Edition

by W. W. BIGG, F.C.A.

This is a standard book which has been of paramount importance to the accountancy profession for many years. Mr W. W. Bigg who has edited this work for some thirty-five years, needs no introduction to the accountancy profession. He is probably the leading authority on the subject of auditing today. In this most recent edition, Mr Bigg has devoted an entire chapter to the audit of mechanized accounting systems, and he has also incorporated the recent recommendations by the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales on auditing and accounting matters.

THE INSTITUTE OF COST AND WORKS ACCOUNTANTS

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

THE forty-sixth annual general meeting of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants was held at the Connaught Rooms, London WC2, on May 21st, with the President, Mr J. P. Wilson, F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., in the chair.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

In the course of his address, Mr Wilson said: It is a tradition of the Institute that the President, at the end of his year of office, delivers an address to members which deals with the events of the past year as affecting the Institute and the profession of accountancy. At the same time he considers the present state of economic affairs and may hazard opinions on the future. The work and interests of the Institute are so much bound up with the trade and industry of this country that such an address must inevitably cover developments in the national economy also. On such a broad canvas there is room for difference of opinion and the President has the privilege of presenting his personal interpretation.

Mr J. P. Wilson

The main feature of the past year has been the change of Government in October 1964 and the attendant change in the course of the national economy. Throughout 1964 and continuing into 1965 industrial output has been maintained at a level which has been high by historical standards and there has been a general increase in the profits of companies reporting in respect of this period. At the same time this state of high industrial activity and profitability has been accompanied by a feeling of unease arising from the unsatisfactory balance of payments. In the first part of 1964 the build-up of an adverse balance of payments was accepted as the natural accompaniment of the upsurge in industrial activity with its requirements of increased inventories of raw materials and work in progress. It was expected that the balance would be righted when these increased purchases passed through the final processes of manufacturing into export sales.

When in the autumn of 1964 the anticipated appreciable increase in exports had not come about and the Labour Government took office after the General Election on October 15th, the country was faced with a balance of payments crisis which was only contained by large loans from foreign countries and an increase in the Bank rate to 7 per cent. Such crises are largely a matter of confidence but this was not the only cause. It has become increasingly apparent that the main underlying weakness in the British economy is the failure to achieve sufficient exports.

High Costs

The accountant engaged in industry is concerned with the economy of the individual undertaking, and as the national economy is the sum of the economies of these undertakings, the practical experience of the accountant can throw light upon the economic problems which beset this country today. In the individual undertaking probably the two main obstacles to export business are that costs are too high to make possible competitive prices in export markets, and that the home market is so much more profitable. To some extent these causes are interrelated because the wage and salary increases which increase costs also make available money for increased demand in the home market. However unpleasant it may be, it must be recognized that our experience of the last decade is that a balance of payments crisis has on two occasions in 1957 and 1961 been solved by Government action in restricting domestic demand and damping down industrial activity. Such measures, while successful in their immediate aim, have been widely condemned as placing a restriction upon the steady expansion of the British economy which is necessary if this country is to keep pace with industrial expansion of other countries and to play her accustomed part in world affairs. It would be more appropriate if condemnation were reserved for the practices of certain sections of the community which are the root cause of the weakness in the national economy.

Wage Spiral

The accountant in industry is well aware that the usual cause of an increase in selling prices is a rise in product costs due to the award of increased wages or salaries. Such awards affect not only the wages and salaries costs of the business, but also the cost of materials and services purchased, as the suppliers' costs are also increased in respect of their labour content. The consequence of continuous wage increases is a continuous rise in prices which has a double effect. It reduces the value of the wage increase in terms of real wages, and it increases costs to a point at which British products are uncompetitive. In the home market selling prices have not been increased to the same extent as wages and over the past fifteen years there has been a substantial rise in real wages.

The value of the pound sterling is fixed in relation to the value of the other leading currencies of the world but if British prices continue to rise in terms of sterling so much faster than prices in other countries, the pound will no longer have a parity of purchasing power with the other currencies and will have to be devalued. If it were possible to contain all increases of wages and salaries to the figure of 3 per cent per annum with any confidence, it should be possible by improvements in efficiency, and by working at reasonably full capacity without the fear of 'stop-go' intervention by the Government, to maintain costs and selling prices at their existing levels and so provide the desired increase in real wages. At the same time this would prevent export prices becoming uncompetitive and remove the threat of the devaluation of the pound.

This in broad terms is the Government's policy in establishing the National Board for Prices and Incomes. Everyone must wish it well in this aim. The doubt is whether the Government has the strength to make the policy work. The great debate in this country today is whether we can plan and control the economy, or whether we must allow the economy to find its own direction through the free play of economic forces working through the prices of the market-place. This division of opinion cuts across both the major political parties. The trade unions with their strength of organized labour have previously sought to retain their freedom to join in the economic free-for-all and to secure the greatest possible slice of the cake for their own members, frequently without regard to the broader considerations of the national well-being. Indeed they have competed with each other in striving for the greatest slice. If the trade unions were prepared to accept the responsibility which is in keeping with their strength and to co-operate in the working of a national policy for prices and incomes, incalculable benefit to the nation would result.

National Job Evaluation

If the rule of economic force in the establishment of wage levels were to be eliminated, and the rule of law or arbitration substituted in the case of dispute, the question would arise how the relative remuneration of different classes of workers should be established. To some extent this would be determined by the existing levels of remuneration and the demand and supply for workers of a particular category, but for reference in cases of arbitration and as a guide in the training and deployment of the national labour force it would be helpful to carry out an exercise of job evaluation. Such a scheme would establish the relative wage levels for different occupations such as a policeman, nurse, teacher, bus conductor, fitter or chemical process worker. Such an evaluation would not permit of a fine degree of accuracy, it would inevitably be based on subjective analysis, and no one would agree with all its values; but at least something is better than nothing. Arbitration on wage claims has in the past consisted too frequently of splitting the difference between the claimed and the offered figure. Job evaluation has been used in the individual undertaking; its principles are equally applicable on a national scale.

The cost of a product or service is not determined solely by the price of materials and services and the rates of wages, but also by the efficiency with which the factors of production are employed. On several counts labour is not efficiently employed. Restrictive practices on the part of the worker are still widely prevalent and it is almost inconceivable that those indulging in such practices should be unaware of the damage done to the national interest and indirectly to their own interest. The rapid turnover of labour which unfortunately appears to be a concomitant of full employment is a heavy cost upon industry. Employers are also responsible for the under-employment of labour by retaining workers when during periods of low order intake they cannot be kept fully employed. At the present time, when there are more vacancies for labour than unemployed to fill them, it is essential that the national labour force should be used to the best advantage, and there is a strong case for bringing into effect the payroll tax which was introduced in 1962 but never implemented. At the same time the imposition of such a tax upon industry would have to be compensated by alleviation of other taxes upon industry.

Need for Efficient Plant

While conditions over which the management of industry has no control can seriously affect the costs of a business, it is nevertheless the responsibility of the management so to direct the affairs of the business that costs are kept to a minimum. The use of the most modern and efficient plant is a means of securing the most economical production, and it was the policy of the previous Government to encourage this by the generous capital allowances against tax in respect of purchases of certain fixed assets. It is a matter for regret that the change in the basis of taxation consequent upon the introduction of corporation tax has in effect devalued the allowances. This not only represents the removal of an incentive to modernization, but in respect of existing assets on which further capital allowances remain to be granted it could be construed as a breach of faith.

While the importance of using the most efficient plant cannot be gainsaid, the use of the most efficient techniques of management is equally important. Indeed, the full value of the most modern plant cannot be achieved unless the most appropriate techniques of management are used. It is, however, frequently found that management will invest in a tangible machine, but will fail to spend money in acquiring the intangible asset of improved techniques of management. It will buy a computer but not a modern costing system.

This is not to suggest that improved techniques of management merely have to be bought. Much can be done by engaging the right staff or by using the services of consultants, but what is more important is that the top management of an undertaking should have or should acquire the appreciation of how these techniques can be employed and what benefit they can bring to the undertaking. The need for education in business at its highest levels is widely appreciated and the establishment of the two business schools in this country is to be welcomed. Education in business studies has not been neglected in this country. Its facilities have been widely and eagerly used, but perhaps most extensively by lower and middle management. Business education has now become fashionable and aimed at the very top level of management. It has been the experience of persons and institutions engaged in the provision of extra mural courses of short duration in business management subjects that those attending the courses are invariably more junior than those for whom the course was planned. It is a discouraging tendency in business education that senior executives, who because of their preoccupation with broad affairs and day-to-day decisions would particularly benefit from the more detailed study of new techniques, so frequently think that such courses are the very thing for their juniors.

The accountant has a vital part to play in assisting management to secure the greatest efficiency of operation. The accountant's part is to provide to management the information, mainly expressed in that most useful common denominator of money, on which management can take action in making decisions and exercising control. This information must always be significant and apposite to the needs of the management, not only in respect of the general operation of the business but also in respect of the particular problems which arise from time to time. This information cannot be provided by the rule of thumb operation of a particular accountancy system. It is first necessary to design a system to provide continuously the basic information needed by the business for control purposes and which at the same time permits the ancillary information likely to be required from time to time to be provided as quickly and easily as possible. In this work the accountant will use as necessary all the techniques of accountancy – historical accounting, budgetary control and standard costing, marginal costing, accounting for changing price levels and others. This calls for a skill of a high order and a 'feel' for the business being carried on which comes from the practical experience of industry which is one of the Institute's requirements for membership. This training enables members of the Institute to read figures not merely as figures but in terms of real things and real events in the business.

Raising Management Accountancy Standards

There is considerable disparity in the standards of management accountancy in the different undertakings in British industry. While in some undertakings members of the Institute are concerned in the utilization of the mathematical techniques which are now becoming an accepted part of management accountancy, and in the operation of computers for accountancy and other management techniques, there are nevertheless many undertakings where only the most rudimentary form of management accountancy is in operation. One of the aims of the Institute must be to raise the general standard of management accountancy throughout industry. The general adoption of budgetary control and standard costing in the forms tailor-made for each industry and undertaking would bring considerable advantage. The wise use of the concept of marginal costing in those situations in which it is appropriate should become widespread. It is pertinent to inquire whether a greater understanding of the concept of marginal costing would promote an increase of exports, on the basis that while export selling prices may be low in comparison with home prices, or even below the full cost of the products, the excess of such prices over the marginal costs of the products might make a valuable contribution towards the fund for fixed overheads and profits. To this end that the best modern practices of management accountancy should be made known, the Institute from time to time issues its publications. In the last year it has published The Profitable Use of Capital in Industry setting out the true nature of capital and profits, techniques for the appraisal of capital projects, the planning and control of capital expenditure and the effective use of capital invested. The Institute recognizes the need for the general appreciation in industry of what management accountancy has to offer, and the publication presents this subject in a form which should make it of considerable interest to those engaged in general management.

The accountant must go further than using the most appropriate technique to provide the information required. The provision of information is a means not an end. The end is the use of this information to maintain and increase the profitability of the business. In general the use of such information is the responsibility of general management, but it is the accountant's task to study and interpret the information, to suggest items for more detailed investigation and in collaboration with the technicians of the business to develop schemes of improvement. Vigilance is the price of cost reduction.

While the value of management accountancy and of the work of the Institute is widely accepted in industry, governments appear to be strangely unaware of what modern practice of management accountancy has to offer. Whereas the harsh competitiveness in industry may have promoted the use of management accountancy, the absence of this impelling factor may account for the seeming indifference of governments. It remains to be seen whether the new Government will avail itself of the fund of experience of modern management and industrial accountancy which lies within The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants. It surely has problems for the solution of which the expertise of the members of this Institute would be invaluable.

Principles of management accountancy which are applicable to the economy of the individual undertaking are equally applicable to the national economy. For example, marginal costing is essentially the recognition that certain costs tend to remain fixed in aggregate although the volume of work undertaken may vary considerably. It is pertinent to inquire whether the Government, in deciding to purchase American aircraft, have taken into account that from the national viewpoint an appreciable part of the costs of the British aircraft industry are fixed, and that the purchase price of the American aircraft should be considered in comparison with the marginal, or out-of-pocket cost of British aircraft. The necessity is to look at the matter as a whole.

With regard to matters more closely concerned with the profession of accountancy the proposals for the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services have been accepted by the members of the five participating bodies and extensive administrative work is going forward. The participation of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland has been delayed due to legal formalities peculiar to that Institute's constitution. The establishment of the Joint Diploma is a great step forward in the furtherance of management accountancy with its attendant advantages for the industry of this country.

Technical Activities of the Institute

On the domestic affairs of the Institute very little need be said in this address as these matters are fully dealt with in the Report of the Council now before you. The Institute goes forward. In 1963–64 the then President, Mr C. Eric Power, inaugurated a comprehensive review of the Institute's policy, as a result of which a number of important decisions were taken, the implementation of which has proceeded during the past year. A major decision was that the Institute's technical activities in the sectors of research, education and examinations should be intensified. The reason for the formation of the Institute in 1919 was the desirability of developing a technique of accountancy, and from that day forward the study and development of techniques has been a major interest of the Institute. This intensification of work on the technical aspects of the Institute's activities will necessitate a strong Technical Department at headquarters. It is hoped that this will be accompanied by an ever increased interest and participation in technical developments by the members of the Institute. If this hope is realized and this tradition of the Institute is maintained, it will go forward towards a future which is rich in opportunity and promise.

The progress of the Institute depends upon personal effort. The last year with its many developments has made heavy demands upon the staff and these have been met willingly and without stint. It is fitting that this acknowledgement should be made in an address by the President, who probably better than any member knows the extent and value of their services. The Institute is broadly based in that a great number of its members are active in its direction and work. It is fitting also to record an appreciation of all those members who freely give their time and interest to the Institute.

NEW PRESIDENT ELECTED

As noted elsewhere in this issue, Mr Harry Hodgson, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., was elected President of the Institute for the ensuing year. Mr W. L. Spalding, C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., was re-elected a Vice-President and Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., was also elected a Vice-President.

CONFERENCE ON THE PROFITABLE USE OF CAPITAL IN INDUSTRY

A REPRESENTATIVE gathering of members from all parts of the United Kingdom attended a conference held in London last week-end by The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants. There were no prepared papers, the discussions being centred round the Institute's latest publication The Profitable use of Capital in Industry.

The proceedings were opened on Friday evening with addresses by Mr H. Kirkham, F.C.W.A., Chairman of the Institute's Research and Technical Committee, and Dr J. M. S. Risk, B.COM., PH.D., C.A., F.C.W.A., the leader of the course.

During Saturday, groups reported their findings at plenary sessions on 'The return on capital employed' and on 'Capital investment appraisal' under the chairmanship respectively of Mr J. Borsay, F.C.W.A., and Mr Ian T. Morrow, C.A., F.C.W.A., who are both Past Presidents. On Sunday, plenary sessions on 'Financial planning, budgeting and capital expenditure control' and 'Control of working capital' were conducted by Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., and Mr W. L. Spalding, B.SC.(ECON.), C.A., F.C.W.A.

Discussions were stimulated by the exchange of experience and ideas on current practice in different companies and on the general areas in which the knowledge of management might be improved. They were directed towards increasing profitability, and in particular on capital employed; also on the importance of techniques of giving the right advice to management in the field of capital investment.

In dealing with the capital employed in an enterprise stress was laid on the need to remember that return on investment depended on human as well as financial factors. There was a tendency to overlook this. Sound investment on the human side was an important element in success.

It was agreed that efficient control of investment in stock was often lacking. Many firms got into difficulties because the control of working capital was not given the same attention as the control of expenditure on fixed assets. A scientific study of the stock levels actually required in a business could lead not only to a freeing of capital but also to reductions in the cost of labour, storage, insurance and wastage. It was estimated that the cost of holding stocks varied between 12 per cent and 25 per cent per annum of the investment in them.

Emphasis was placed on the need to control capital expenditure after approval in principle had been given. Budget approval was not approval of expenditure in detail. Difficulties which arose from not having a time limit on capital expenditure were also discussed: on balance it was thought preferable to impose a time limit.

In dealing with the complicated question of the rate of return on investment which might be considered adequate, the view was put forward that as a very rough guide the return should be at least twice the Bank rate. Other factors were involved, however – apart from money – such as service to the community, and happy working conditions for the people connected with the enterprise. The amount of risk capital involved would also have a material effect on the rate required to attract investment.

Amongst other matters discussed was the handling of research costs, particularly where the results of research were a major factor in survival and growth. Research expenditure was difficult to control and it was felt that in the case of advanced research it should be treated as an allocation of profits and not a cost.

Mr H. Hodgson, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., the new President of the Institute, in summing up, emphasized that further examination might be necessary as to the proportion of profits which companies ought to retain. The trend of current fiscal policy was to encourage high profit retention. Mr Hodgson said that a good deal of hard thinking remained to be done on the entire range of subjects. No final conclusion had been reached as to what precisely was the 'investment' to which 'profit' should be related. The question still remained whether return on investment was indeed always a completely satisfactory measure, or whether the value of assets should be used instead.

OBITUARY

Colonel N. B. Hart, O.B.E., T.D., D.L., M.A., LL.B., F.C.A.

It is with regret that we record the sudden death at the age of 74 of Colonel N. B. Hart, O.B.E., T.D., D.L., M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., senior partner in the Lincoln firm of Stephenson, Smart & Co, Chartered Accountants. A Cambridge graduate and a Bachelor of Law, he was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1926. He had been associated with the Lincolnshire area throughout his professional career and was also chairman of the family business, Hart & Son (Seed Merchants) Ltd, of Stamford.

In the First World War he served at Gallipoli and in other campaigns and was later awarded the O.B.E. and the Territorial Decoration. From 1933 to 1938 he commanded the Fifth Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment (T.A.) and the 46th Searchlight Regiment, R.E. (T.A.). He was G.S.O. (1) Northern Command from 1939 to 1943. Chairman of the Lincolnshire Territorial Army and Auxiliary Forces Association from 1952 to 1955, he was also honorary colonel of 581 (M) H.A.A. Regiment, R.A. (T.A.).

In 1953 Col Hart served as President of The Hull, East Yorkshire and Lincolnshire Society of Chartered Accountants which was the host society for that year's Autumn Meeting of the Institute held at Scarborough. He was also Chairman of the Lincolnshire Group of Chartered Accountants in 1958.

Colonel Hart was Chairman of the Lincolnshire Trustee Savings Bank for several years and Financial Adviser to the Lincoln Diocesan Board of the Church of England. He was appointed a Deputy Lieutenant of Lincolnshire in 1951.

He leaves a widow, Mrs Audrey Hart, a daughter – to whose wedding in London he was travelling at the time of his death – and four sons.

Mr Cosmo Alexander Gordon, M.C., M.A.

We have learned with regret of the death at his home at the Old Manse, Insch, Aberdeenshire, of Mr Cosmo Alexander Gordon, M.C., M.A., a former librarian of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. He was 78.

Mr Gordon, a graduate of King's College, Cambridge, was appointed Librarian of the Institute in 1911 at the age of 24. In December of 1913 he travelled to Prague to examine the Kheil collection of over one thousand six hundred books on accounting, and these the Institute subsequently purchased. He can well be regarded as the co-founder – with F. W. Pixley, chairman of the Library Committee from 1893 to 1933 – of the Institute's priceless collection of early books on accounting.

During the First World War Cosmo Gordon saw service in France winning the M.C. and later suffering a long spell in hospital through being gassed. He subsequently joined Sotheby & Co as a book expert and it was not until 1933 that he returned to the Institute. In 1937 the Institute published a third edition of its library catalogue and Volume Two of this was at the time the most complete bibliography of book-keeping published.

In 1941 he left the Library for the duration of the Second World War and joined a division of the Board of Trade; Mrs Gordon, who died in 1964, acted as Librarian during 1941 and 1942. He returned to the Institute early in 1946 and retired late in 1948 to Aberdeenshire. His last work was A Bibliography of Lucretius published in 1962 by Hart-Davis. This was something of an achievement of a life-long ambition and displayed his thorough and painstaking work as well as his scholarship. He leaves a son and two daughters.

INTRODUCTION TO BUSINESS COMPUTER PROGRAMMING

T. W. McRAE, C.A.

In the beginning electronic digital computers were used solely for mathematical and statistical work, and so, not unnaturally, the programming of these machines was carried out by mathematicians. The most common application of computers today is in the field of commercial data processing, but the myth that a knowledge of mathematics or even of electronics is required before one is qualified to become a programmer is hard of dying. In fact no preliminary qualifications are required for programming except perhaps a certain basic common sense.

This little book is intended for accountants, auditors, managers and others who would like to find out what programming is about. The book is not intended as a 'programmers' manual' but rather as an introduction to the concept of programming and the job of the programmer.
